

In 2004/05, the first year of my second five-year term as The Ombudsman, we are completely delinked from Government. With the last seconded civil servant returned to Government, ours is now a workforce entirely appointed by me on contract. With flexible and prudent management, our financial situation has remained safe and sound.

Despite our total independence, some in the community still labour under a misconception that we are part of Government. It is true that my Office is funded from the public purse. However, The Ombudsman Ordinance makes it clear that “the Ombudsman shall not be regarded as a servant or agent of the Government”. We are most certainly not a Government department. We are an independent and impartial monitor of Government and public bodies. We are accountable to the public. In this context, we investigate without fear or favour to establish facts and to improve public services.

A point often raised with me upon my discovery of maladministration is whose head should roll and how should the culprit be punished? My Office is not a court of law. The focus of my functions is not on individual officials. My inquiries are directed at systems, solutions to problems and improvement to administration. Staff discipline is a matter for the organisation concerned.

Questions have also been raised over fluctuations in our caseload and the outcome of our investigations. The simple answer is that we do not “cook the books”. Our Office has no control over the kind, or the number, of complaints coming in. Certainly, I do not attempt to control the level of substantiation or not. We investigate each case impartially and objectively, presenting the outcome of our investigation solely on the basis of our findings.

Speaking of findings, I view with considerable concern that inadequate inter-departmental coordination remains a continuing, perhaps even growing, trend among Government bureaux and departments. This was first mentioned in my Annual Report 2003 and again featured in my Annual Report last year. There are now signs of different disciplines in Government becoming more compartmentalised. Some segments of the Administration seem to be forgetting, or ignoring, that they are an integral part of one and the same Government. This is worrying. It is not healthy. It impairs not only the efficiency in public services but also the image of Government.

While the main business of my Office is handling public complaints, I am delighted to see growing awareness of my powers for direct investigation. This enables me to examine, even without complaints, systematic deficiencies and systemic problems in the public organisations listed in Schedule 1 to The Ombudsman Ordinance. I probe into these areas and propose improvement in the public interest.

My authority for direct investigation has gained greater recognition this year: Time and again, there have been calls from the public, the media and politicians for me to initiate direct investigation into matters of major community concern. While I appreciate the confidence in my Office, I ensure that such matters are properly within my jurisdiction and do not intrude upon the purview of other authorities.

Last year, I indicated that with 15 years experience behind us, it is time to review the jurisdiction of The Ombudsman. This review has begun. I am examining our current Schedule of Government departments and public bodies and the restrictions on my investigative powers and purview. This will make for more effective overview of public administration. In the final analysis, my aim is for good governance and ever better service for our community.

Phasing out of Civil Servants

1.1 I first broached the subject of “delinking” with the Administration in 2001. Three years later, I can now claim that my Office is totally delinked from Government, with a workforce entirely on contract. I have released civil servants seconded from Government in phases to minimise the impact of a drastic loss of experience and expertise that may affect the operation of my Office.

1.2 10 December 2004 is a milestone in our development as we bade farewell to the last civil service secondee. The concern of the public and the Legislative Council that the independence of The Ombudsman's Office might be compromised by the secondment arrangement should be put to total rest.

Maximising Staff Resources

1.3 The number of complaints received has picked up quickly after Severe Acute Respiratory Syndrome (“SARS”) in 2003 subsided. This year, we maintain a high level of incoming complaints similar to last year. To cope with the heavy caseload, we adopt flexible approaches in the deployment of manpower resources as well as allocation of cases among Investigation

Teams to maximise output. During the year, we concluded a total of 5,023 complaints, compared with 4,345 last year.

1.4 I also review my establishment from time to time to streamline and adjust our staff resources to ensure our financial viability without affecting our operational efficiency and effectiveness. At the directorate level, we have decided to implement an important structural change by deleting a Principal Executive Officer post, thus reducing the number of directorate members from five to four. The investigative and administrative duties of that post have already been shared among the heads of the Investigation Divisions and the Administrative and Development Division. The division of responsibility among the remaining directorate officers was revised for clearer and better balanced distribution of duties.

1.5 For support services, we reviewed the secretarial and clerical support for the two Investigation Divisions and the teams. We found room for consolidation and re-alignment of duties. The rescheduling exercise is now in hand, to be completed in the first half of 2005. We also deleted a couple of clerical posts due to simplifying our organisation and re-engineering procedures and practices.

Civil Servants	74 (82.2%)	40 (40.8%)	16 (17%)	5 (5.7%)	0 (0%)
Total	90	98	92	88	88

1.6 The continued employment of Temporary Case Officers (“TCOs”) has helped to cater for seasonal fluctuations of caseload or to carry specific projects. Most of our TCOs have rich experience in public administration and can replenish the loss of experience due to phasing out of civil service secondees.

Staff Training

1.7 With new entrants joining our Office, we are mindful of their training needs. Our aim is to help them settle in and be fully operational as quickly as possible. To this end, we attach great importance to both induction and on-the-job training to familiarise them with our mode of operation and complaint handling process.

1.8 In the past couple of years, we steadily reduced our reliance on Government’s training services. Although we still resort to some of the courses run by the Civil Service Training and Development Institute for our staff to acquire basic skills, we endeavour to develop our own programmes for specific operational needs. We have commissioned an experienced trainer to run Putonghua courses for staff during lunch breaks to cater for the increasing use of the language in answering enquiries and interviewing complainants. We are also planning to design and run our own courses to sharpen the skills of our investigators in report writing.

1.9 To strengthen communication and experience sharing, our open forums for staff will be organised every two months, starting from February 2005. Investigation teams take turns to offer topics for discussion and to lead the sessions. These forums provide an opportunity for investigators to exchange views on common features of their work or problems and solutions. The Ombudsman and the directorate take part to brief staff on the management’s views on important issues and to get feedback. Topics covered during the year include:

- “Handling Complaints from a ‘Human Rights’ Angle”;
- “The Ombudsman’s jurisdiction over complaints against the Judiciary”;
- “Customer Service and Staff Complaints”;
- “Client Opinion Survey”; and
- “Duty Officer Scheme”

Comments and conclusions from these forums are taken seriously and where appropriate, result in revision of staff guidelines and working procedures.

Complaints against the Office

1.10 This year, we received a total of 14 complaints against the Office, compared with 11 last year. These complaints are distinct from those directed against The Ombudsman’s conclusions of complaint cases which are handled as Revived Cases (see Chapter 5). The former are either about staff manner or our procedures as shown in the table at Fig 1.3.

1.11 We consider the increase a natural phenomenon and a result of the increase in complaints handled by my Office. As more citizens seek redress through our investigation, so too more came into contact with our personnel and practices. We welcome their comments on our services and suggestions for our improvement.

1.12 We draw reference from these complaints to eliminate deficiencies in our system and streamline our procedures and practices. We have also shared with our staff the lessons learned through our open forums, to strive for better services still to our clients.

1.13 On complaints about non-compliance with our performance pledges, we have upgraded our computerised Complaint Management System by installing an alert mechanism to prompt both individual case officers and their supervisors to keep track of outstanding cases that require attention. This not only helps to monitor our investigation of cases but also ensures proper and timely action by scheduled organisations to follow up our recommendations for improvement to their administration and services.

1.14 Oftentimes, however, complainants who are disappointed with our findings and conclusion of their cases revert to us not only for review of their complaints but with criticism of our staff. In such event, The Ombudsman's role has to be emphasised to them. Our function is to establish facts, in fairness to all concerned. Just because a complainant cannot accept the outcome of the case does not mean that the Office has been deficient or biased. We do not, and must not, pander to any party.

1.15 We are publicly funded and The Ombudsman must be impartial and investigate without fear or favour. This is our creed and our firm practice.

2.1 The ombudsman system is intended to be an alternative to judicial remedies in redressing citizens' grievances against public administrators. Appointed by the Chief Executive of the Hong Kong Special Administrative Region under The Ombudsman Ordinance ("the Ordinance"), Cap 397 Laws of Hong Kong, The Ombudsman has statutory authority to operate independently and freely without fear or favour. The Ombudsman is subject to scrutiny by the courts through judicial review.

Powers and Functions

2.2 We investigate complaints of maladministration by Government departments and public bodies listed in Schedule 1 to the Ordinance:

- to seek out the facts for justice and redress; and
- to improve the quality and efficiency of public administration.

Since 1994, The Ombudsman can also initiate direct investigation without complaints (see Chapter 3).

Powers of Investigation

2.3 The Ordinance empowers The Ombudsman to inquire into a complaint unless it is outside her jurisdiction or otherwise restricted under the Ordinance (see paras. 2.13 – 2.15). Inquiry may be by preliminary inquiries or by full investigation.

2.4 Under section 11A of the Ordinance, The Ombudsman may conduct preliminary inquiries into a complaint before deciding whether a full investigation is warranted. Section 11B empowers The Ombudsman to deal with complaints by mediation with consenting parties. Details of our preliminary inquiry and mediation service are set out in Chapter 4.

Fig. 2.1

Definition of Maladministration – section 2 of the Ordinance

"Maladministration" means inefficient, bad or improper administration and, without derogation from the generality of the foregoing, includes –

- (a) unreasonable conduct, including delay, discourtesy and lack of consideration for a person affected by any action;
- (b) abuse of any power (including any discretionary power) or authority including any action which –
 - (i) is unreasonable, unjust, oppressive or improperly discriminatory or which is in accordance with a practice which is or may be unreasonable, unjust, oppressive or improperly discriminatory;
 - (ii) was based wholly or partly on a mistake of law or fact;
- (c) unreasonable, unjust, oppressive or improperly discriminatory procedures

2.5 Full investigation into complaints is empowered by section 7 of the Ordinance. The law requires The Ombudsman to notify the organisation(s) concerned before commencement of a full investigation. Where preliminary inquiries or mediation point to the need for a full investigation, the parties to the complaint will be so informed.

2.6 The Ombudsman determines whether a complaint is subject to her jurisdiction. Where The Ombudsman considers it in the public interest to do so, she may continue with an investigation even if the complainant has withdrawn his or her complaint.

2.7 Like ombudsmen elsewhere, The Ombudsman has extensive investigative powers. Section 13 of the Ordinance provides powers to summon any person for examination or require such person to furnish information and produce any document or object in his possession or under his control.

2.8 Section 20 of the Ordinance empowers The Ombudsman and her officers to enter any premises of a scheduled organisation, inspect the premises and carry out on the premises any investigation within her jurisdiction.

Fig. 2.2

Powers of Investigation

- Summoning of witnesses
- Access to documents including classified documents
- Entry into premises
- Penalty for not cooperating in investigation

2.9 Under section 23 of the Ordinance, it is an offence to obstruct, without lawful excuse, The Ombudsman or her officers in the exercise of powers conferred by the Ordinance, fail to comply with their lawful requirements, make false statements or otherwise knowingly mislead them. Offenders are liable to a fine of $10,000 and to imprisonment for six months.

Investigation Reports

2.10 The Ombudsman must, under section 17 of the Ordinance, inform the complainant of the result of investigation.

2.11 The Ombudsman is empowered under section 16 of the Ordinance to report her findings, opinions and recommendations on completion of a full investigation. The organisation concerned will be given an opportunity to comment on The Ombudsman's findings. The final report will be given to the head of the organisation for information and implementation of her recommendations, where appropriate.

2.12 Unlike Court verdicts, The Ombudsman's recommendations are not binding. Yet, where the head of the organisation disagrees with her findings or refuses to accept her recommendations, The Ombudsman may consider submitting the report to the Chief Executive. Furthermore, where an organisation fails to implement or to act adequately on any of her recommendations, The Ombudsman may also report to the Chief Executive. Section 16(6) of the Ordinance requires that, within one month of such a report being submitted, or such longer period as the Chief Executive may determine, a copy of the report shall be laid before the Legislative Council.

Restrictions on Jurisdiction

2.13 The Ombudsman's purview is not all pervasive. Section 8, read with Schedule 2 to the Ordinance, specifies actions not subject to The Ombudsman's investigation, i.e. actions outside her jurisdiction.

Fig. 2.3

Examples of Actions not Subject to Investigation - Schedule 2 to the Ordinance

- Actions in relation to security, defence or international relations
- Legal proceedings or prosecution decisions
- Exercise of power to pardon criminals
- Contractual or commercial transactions
- Personnel matters
- Grant of honours, awards or privileges by Government
- Actions by the Chief Executive personally
- Imposition or variation of conditions of land grant
- Actions in relation to Hong Kong Codes on Takeovers and Mergers and Share Repurchases
- Crime prevention and investigation actions by Hong Kong Police Force or Independent Commission Against Corruption

2.14 Government policies and professional judgments are outside The Ombudsman's jurisdiction as they are not administrative actions per se. However, they are often subjects of complaints. The Ombudsman would scrutinise them carefully to see if there are administrative aspects that fall within her jurisdiction.

2.15 Section 10(1) of the Ordinance prescribes restrictions where The Ombudsman shall not conduct an investigation.

Fig. 2.4

Major Restrictions on Investigation of Complaint – section 10 (1) of the Ordinance

- Complainant having knowledge of subject of complaint for more than two years
- Complaint made anonymously
- Complainant not identified or traceable
- Complaint not made by person aggrieved or suitable representative
- Subject of complaint and complainant having no connection with Hong Kong
- Statutory right of appeal or remedy by way of legal proceedings (except judicial review) being available to complainant

2.16 Under section 10(2) of the Ordinance, The Ombudsman may decide not to investigate a complaint under certain circumstances.

Fig. 2.5

Circumstances Where The Ombudsman may Decide not to Investigate – section 10 (2) of the Ordinance

- Investigation of similar complaints before revealed no maladministration
- Subject of complaint is trivial
- Complaint is frivolous or vexatious or is not made in good faith
- Investigation is, for any other reason, unnecessary

2.17 My Office critically examines all in-coming complaints to establish whether they come within my statutory purview and whether they have a prima facie case to warrant investigation. Where The Ombudsman decides not to conduct or to discontinue an investigation, she must inform the complainant of her decision with reasons. Where possible, we still try to help the complainant by pointing out the appropriate avenues for redress.

2.18 It is at times not easy to demarcate the boundaries prescribed in Schedule 2 to the Ordinance. I take a liberal approach and “screen in” all points administrative in nature for scrutiny and inquiry where appropriate. My aim is to take every opportunity to identify areas for improvement in public administration.

2.19 Some of the restrictions prescribed by section 10(1) of the Ordinance are discretionary. I exercise discretion with caution and in accordance with the provisions of the law in deciding whether or not to conduct, or to discontinue, an investigation.

Need for Prima Facie Evidence

2.20 From time to time, members of the public send us messages to express dissatisfaction with certain organisations but produce no concrete details. While our role requires us to investigate complaints, we cannot do so unless complainants at least tell us what has actually happened, how they are aggrieved and by what or whom. A mere expression of opinions or suspicion about something amiss does not make a prima facie case justifying our investigation. We would, therefore, have to ask the complainant for further details to support the complaint before deciding whether to use our limited resources to pursue it.

Secrecy Requirement

2.21 We are duty-bound to explain to the public how we go about our work for a proper understanding of our procedures and practices. However, all members of my Office and I, as well as my advisers, are bound by The Ombudsman Ordinance, under penalty, to maintain secrecy over specific cases. We must keep strictly confidential all matters that come to our knowledge in the exercise and execution of our functions. The aim is to ensure any person or organisation providing information to our Office can do so without reserve and without fear of possible consequences from the disclosure of their identity or related data. Breach of this statutory requirement is a criminal offence, which carries a maximum fine of $50,000 and imprisonment for two years.

2.22 From time to time, Legislative Councillors and civic leaders, members of the public and the media refer complaints to me, expecting to be informed of the progress of our processing. We are grateful for their support. However, we are bound by law not to discuss with, or to disclose to, third parties the processing or the outcome of any case. Except for official publication of an investigation report in anonymised form, we cannot and will not respond to any enquiry on individual complaints other than from the parties concerned. Again, I thank all who have referred cases to my Office and appreciate their understanding of and respect for our secrecy code.

2.23 Before starting inquiries, we always seek the complainants' consent to obtain their personal data from the organisations concerned and to reproduce their documents to relevant organisations for processing their cases. This safeguards the privacy of their personal data. Where a complainant does not give consent, we may not be able to pursue his/her case.

2.24 The secrecy code is the cornerstone of the ombudsman system. It is strictly observed by all of us in discharging our duties.

The Ombudsman's Discretion

2.25 The Ordinance gives The Ombudsman discretion to undertake or not, continue or discontinue an investigation. Exercise of this discretion enables me to make the best use of our resources for the benefit of the community.

2.26 Owing to my statutory independence, my decision on any case is final. Anyone not satisfied with my decision may request my Office to review the case. If the request is acceded to, I will normally assign a different investigator to assist in the review for the sake of objectivity. Alternatively, the complainant may apply to the Court for judicial review.

Jurisdictional Review

2.27 In my Annual Report of 2004, I stated that with 15 years behind us since our establishment in 1989, it was time to review the functions and purview of The Ombudsman. I am pleased to say that such a review of The Ombudsman's jurisdiction has commenced. Based on our operational experience and practices of my counterparts overseas, we are examining the need for and feasibility of the points below for proposals to the Administration:

- (a) adding more organisations to Schedule 1 to the Ordinance to place them within my purview;
- (b) relaxing some of the restrictions on my investigative powers in Schedule 2 to the Ordinance; and
- (c) resolving some of the difficulties or uncertainties encountered by our officers in discharging their duties.

3.1 Since June 1994, The Ombudsman may initiate direct investigation in the absence of complaints. Paragraph (ii) of section 7(1) of the Ordinance gives her a free hand to probe into matters of public interest or community concern that call for review of administrative systems and procedures or practices. This is an important function because it enables me to conduct independent reviews at a macro level, as opposed to individual cases, examine systems with systemic problems or widespread defect and recommend measures for improvement.

Aims and Objects

3.2 Our direct investigations aim to :

- (a) follow through systemic problems which investigation of individual complaints cannot solve;
- (b) eliminate problems and obviate complaints; and
- (c) address fundamental administration flaws believed to be the underlying cause for complaints.

3.3 With direct investigation, we endeavour to improve the quality of public administration, enhance transparency and promote accountability. This should help Government and public bodies to appreciate the needs and expectations of an ever more discerning and increasingly demanding community. Meanwhile, it opens up the operations of public administration for closer scrutiny and clearer understanding.

Selection of Issues

3.4 Selection and monitoring of areas for direct investigation is carefully done by a standing panel chaired by my Deputy and comprising the two Assistant Ombudsmen and our small Direct Investigation Team.

3.5 A direct investigation may be prompted by topical issues or repeated complaints on particular matters and new or revised Government policies. Such matters are generally :

- of community interest, aspirations or expectations;
- of considerable scale or in some number;
- of macro magnitude and topical concern;
- not under examination by another agency; and
- not for the courts or tribunals.

3.6 I am grateful for the public confidence in my Office, as evidenced by calls for me to initiate direct investigation when public issues arise. Notable examples this year include:

- (a) sale of the Hunghom Peninsula Home Ownership Scheme estate; and
- (b) institution of the Link Real Estate Investment Trust for privatisation of Housing Authority shopping centres and car parks.

3.7 However, restrictions by the Ordinance preclude my action in relation to contractual or commercial transactions and decisions to do with any interest in Government land or value for money in the use of resources. I am acutely aware of these barriers. I envisaged that any direct investigation conducted by me into the two issues above was likely to raise more questions than I could answer within my purview. I was, therefore, content to leave them to other more suitable authorities.

Investigation Methodology

3.8 My statutory powers for direct investigation are similar to those for inquiries into complaints. However, unlike individual complaints, it is our established practice to declare publicly the initiation of direct investigation and invite views from relevant sectors as well as the community at large.

3.9 Before we formally launch a direct investigation, we may at times conduct an initial assessment ("DI assessment"). For this purpose, we research relevant information publicly available from, say, annual reports and homepages, legislation and media reports. We may also seek information from the organisations direct. If such assessment points to the need for further scrutiny, I will formally notify the heads of the organisations concerned before making a public declaration of a direct investigation. Invariably, they pledge cooperation to facilitate our investigation.

3.10 Where our DI assessment finds no significant maladministration, or proactive improvement has been made by the organisations concerned, we will not initiate a direct investigation but simply forward our DI assessment report to the organisations for comment. Such report outlines the background to the issue, an appraisal of public concern, our observations on the role and action (especially any remedial action) of the organisation(s) concerned and our recommendations.

3.11 While not involving in-depth investigation, such assessments do analyse matters of wide public interest and provide positive pointers for improvement. For example, we conducted an assessment on the information provided in the Inland Revenue Department ("IRD")'s Assessment and Demand for Tax ("the notice").

We found that the notice did not give enough information on the calculation of the tax payable, resulting in some taxpayers being unable to reconcile the amount they thought they had to pay and the amount actually charged by IRD. Some of the Assessor's Notes on the reverse page of the notice were also difficult to comprehend. While the issue does not merit further scrutiny, we suggested improvement measures. IRD has since reviewed to improve services.

Investigations over the Years

3.12 Since conferment of powers for direct investigation in 1994, this Office has completed 51 direct investigations resulting in 700 recommendations (see Annex 6). We request the organisations concerned to report progress every six months for monitoring their implementation of our recommendations until the recommendations are fully implemented.

3.13 Over the last five years, 25 direct investigations have been undertaken :

3.15 In general, the organisations concerned have been cooperative during the investigation process, as they understand that our aim is to help them improve their systems, procedures and practices for better administration. We are, of course, also grateful to the media and the public at large for their support for our findings and recommendations when they are published.

Caseload

5.1 Caseload for the year is summarised below:

- 11,742 enquiries received;
- 4,654 complaints received; and
- 5,023 complaints concluded.

After years of continuous increase in the number of complaints received this year saw a drop in the figure, from 4,661. However, our pace of processing and concluding cases rose to a record high, with 15.6% increase compared with the figure of 4,345 in the previous year.

* The period of Reporting Year has changed since 2001/02 (see footnote to Table 1).

5.4 The number of completed cases not meeting the performance pledges during the reporting period was 92 (or 3.0%), compared to 78 (or 3.2%) for the previous reporting year. Factors contributing to longer processing time included one or more of the factors below:

- (a) highly complex cases necessitating more elaborate investigation process;
- (b) voluminous documents (e.g. some running into some hundreds of pages) requiring extra time to examine and distill for relevant information;
- (c) new developments or supply of further material emerging mid-stream; and
- (d) challenges, by complainants or organisations concerned.

Challenges

5.5 Organisations and complainants occasionally challenge our decisions or actions. While such challenges inevitably prolong the processing time of cases, they do help us keep our procedures and practices under critical scrutiny to ensure that they are proper and reasonable.

Jurisdiction

5.6 In my 2004 Annual Report, I raised the subject of personnel matters. We had a case where the Civil Service Bureau had been processing a discipline case for years with no prospect of concluding it, thus leaving the persons concerned in great anxiety. Aware that personnel matters are outside our jurisdiction, we considered it our duty to serve our clients and so questioned whether even straightforward omissions or delays in personnel matters were out of bounds to us. Legal advice has since confirmed that the Ordinance, as now worded, does preclude our handling any aspect whatsoever, including even inordinate delay in action on personnel matters. This raises the question whether the Ordinance might be unduly restrictive in this respect.

5.7 However, I must abide by the law. Meanwhile, I will continue to explain to complainants who criticise me for not taking up their case of evidently gross maladministration.

5.8 With other cases which I screen out with specific reasons, some complainants just would not accept that their cases fall outside my jurisdiction. Wherever practicable, we redirect them to the appropriate authorities or channels for advice, assistance or redress.

Revived Cases

5.9 From time to time, complainants dissatisfied with our findings or my conclusion raise objections, particularly if their complaints are found to be unsubstantiated. In the reporting period, we received 334 requests for review, compared to 359 for the last year. The decision on the case was varied after review in eight cases, compared to 14 for the last year.

5.10 We treat each and every objection as an appeal. We faithfully review the case for fresh evidence or new angle. Where new information comes to light, we re-open investigation. We endeavour to address all their points in our response.

5.11 Special procedures apply in the handling of revived cases. Whilst an initial investigator will be required to comment on the complainant's grounds for review, the actual review will be carried out by another investigator or by the Chief Investigation Officer. As a rule, draft replies to requests for review are scrutinised by my Deputy and, as with all initial cases, finally approved by me before issue.

Fig. 5.4

	Yes	No	Yes	No
Decision varied	2	–	6	–	–	8
Decision upheld	–	299	–	–	27	326
						334

5.12 However, most complainants seeking a review tend to reiterate their arguments and simply express dissatisfaction over my conclusion. Many were just unhappy not to have their way with the organisation concerned. Our experience shows that in such cases, factors prompting the complainants to seek review may be summarised as follows :

- (a) rising expectations of the quality of public services;
- (b) an intuitive conviction or their complaints being justified;
- (c) misunderstanding, or inadequate knowledge of practices or policies of the organisations under complaint;
- (d) an expectation of The Ombudsman advocating only the complainant's cause; and
- (e) a desire to put pressure on the organisations concerned.

5.13 Some dissatisfied complainants have raised allegations against individual investigation officers for being biased, incomplete or incompetent. As all investigation reports are subject to my personal approval, such allegations must be seen as complaints against my decisions, not my officers.

5.14 A number of persistent complainants have chosen to vent their discontent and objections by a continuous stream of letters or numerous repeated calls to my staff at different ranks. We understand, and we do sympathise with, their sentiments. However, our primary duty is to establish facts and to ensure fairness to both the complainants and the organisations concerned. This is the spirit and the intent of the ombudsman system. It does not accord with justice or proper use of public resources to enter into endless debate over the same points. As a general rule, we will review on the basis of new evidence or fresh points but we do not respond indefinitely to repeated requests for review of my decision. We certainly do not have the resources or capacity to reply repeatedly to the same case again and again.

Judicial Review

5.15 Apart from asking The Ombudsman to review decisions, individuals or organisations may apply to the court for judicial review. This is a significant provision since, in view of my statutory independence, my decision on a case is final.

5.16 This year, a complainant who remained dissatisfied with my decisions after I had on his request reviewed his case four times, applied for judicial review on my last review. My decision in question was that the facts and arguments provided by the complainant for my fourth review were essentially a repetition of those presented before; hence, there was nothing I could add or should do.

Representations

5.17 I am required by law to inform organisations, normally in the form of draft investigation reports, of any criticism or adverse remarks against them or their staff. Now and then, organisations raise reservations or even take issue with our observations, especially when the complaints are substantiated. We always provide organisations and their officers ample opportunities to make representations. Such representations from, and at times meetings and hearings with, organisations and officers criticised in our draft investigation reports are common fare for my investigators. Where representations are reasonable, we faithfully incorporate into the final report. Where they cannot be accepted, we still record those comments with our reasons for non-acceptance.

5.18 Occasionally, we find officers criticised by us in dispute with their employer organisations over the issues from which our criticism stems. In such cases, we are particularly cautious in distilling indisputable facts and steer away from internal staff disputes when finalising our conclusions.

Secrecy vs Data Privacy in Evidence Collection

5.19 In the course of our inquiries, organisations may refuse to provide material for our examination, notably on grounds of secrecy or data privacy. Invariably, we explain our statutory right to access any information relevant to a case. I am grateful that generally all organisations do cooperate with my Office, although occasionally with some persuasion.

5.20 As explained in Chapter 2, the secrecy code imposed by the Ordinance is the cornerstone of the ombudsman system and enables us to obtain essential information for effective investigation. We also abide by the requirements of the Personal Data (Privacy) Ordinance (“PDPO”) and entertain personal data access requests as long as they do not breach our statutory secrecy code. As a rule, for compliance with the secrecy requirement, we cannot accede to requests for copies of documents collected during our investigation, whether or not they contain personal data of the requester. The Privacy Commissioner has accepted this as exempted under section 58(1) (d) of the PDPO.

5.21 In principle, we promote transparency and accountability of administration. However, we have a statutory duty to safeguard the interests of our clients and the need for confidentiality by organisations involved in our inquiries for them to discharge their functions properly. At times, this results in our being criticised by those seeking to access information held by my Office.

Organisational Culture

5.22 In the 2004 Annual Report, I noted that cases concerning the Lands Department indicated some deeper problem with its organisational culture and had raised this personally with the Director of Lands. I am delighted to report that he responded positively. He directed the organisation of a “hub management” workshop for his directorate and other staff, to encourage more proactive initiative to cooperate with other departments and organisations. His Department has since been more forthcoming towards inquiries.

Nomination of Liaison Officers

5.23 In processing complaints, we request heads of the organisations concerned to nominate suitable officers to be our contact for liaison and efficient handling of the case. We generally respect nomination of the department head. Occasionally, we find some of the liaison officers nominated to be not fully conversant with or representative of the views of the organisation. Where this happens, we have to take it up with the top management to ensure that the officers are fully briefed of the organisation's position on the matter. On a couple of occasions, we had later found the nominated liaison officers to have been actually the subject under complaint, resulting in potential or perceived conflict of interest. This is not satisfactory and we have raised with the heads of the departments concerned: e.g. Education and Manpower Bureau and Housing Department.

Our View

5.24 We regard challenge of our views or conclusions as a healthy reminder to heighten our vigilance and to enhance our professionalism. We endeavour to ensure that our investigations are thorough and impartial. We do not bow to pressure, submit to irrationality or aid and abet in personal vendetta. Open administration and quality service, these are what we work for and foster in the public interest.

Major Forms of Maladministration

6.1 As in 2003/04, this year complaints against “error, wrong decision/advice” (24.0%) topped the list of cases concluded, followed by “failure to follow procedures, delay” (9.4%). In other words, the public sees these as the two most common forms of maladministration. Meanwhile, complaints found to be substantiated or partially substantiated by full investigation¹ were commonly “failure to follow procedures, delay” (27.9%), closely followed by “disparity in treatment, unfairness” (21.6%). The six major categories of complaints, by nature of complaint, are listed in Fig. 6.1.

The Ombudsman’s Recommendations

6.2 The Ombudsman Ordinance requires The Ombudsman to report findings, to give opinions with reasons and to make recommendations after an investigation. My recommendations fall broadly into two categories, namely :

- (a) Redress of grievances – to right specific wrongs, including remedial measures, immediate and longer-term;
- (b) Administrative improvement – to improve the administration of an organisation in general or in specific areas, such as changes to systems, procedures and practices for removing administrative errors, loopholes or deficiencies.

As a rule, I cannot and do not interfere with policies. I respect the relevant authorities as guardian of their policies. However, I do from time to time comment on policies, to help Government focus on possibly outdated aspects or to generate public debate.

Fig. 6.1

Nature of allegation/ maladministration identified	% among all concluded cases [@]	% among all acts of maladministration substantiated [#]
Error, wrong decision/advice	24.0%	9.9%
Failure to follow procedures, delay	9.4%	27.9%
Negligence, omissions	7.6%	9.9%
Disparity in treatment, unfairness	7.4%	21.6%
Lack of response to complaint	6.4%	8.1%
Faulty procedures	6.2%	5.4%

[@] A total of 5,023 were concluded in 2004/05, including cases outside jurisdiction, restricted or concluded after preliminary inquiries, mediation or full investigation (see Table 1).

[#] 111 allegations were substantiated after full investigation in 2004/05.

1 As opposed to mediation and preliminary inquiries, which include INCH and RAC.

6.3 Although many complaints are directed against the actions or attitude of individual officers, our main objective is to enhance the quality of public administration. Accordingly, recommendations from our investigations are generally rehabilitative and preventive rather than punitive in nature. Rarely do we propose disciplinary action against individual officers — this is a matter for the heads of the organisations. In short, we aim to improve rather than to disapprove, to comment constructively and not to carp critically.

6.4 If an investigation report is, in my opinion, not adequately acted upon by the head of the organisation concerned, The Ombudsman Ordinance provides that I may submit my report and recommendations together with any further observations to the Chief Executive. I may also make a further report to the Chief Executive if I consider a serious irregularity or injustice to have taken place. Within one month or such longer period as the Chief Executive may determine, a copy of such further report shall be laid before the Legislative Council.

The Government Minute on Implementation

6.5 Since 1995, the Administration has been submitting a Government Minute to the Legislative Council within three months after the tabling of The Ombudsman's Annual Report. This summarises the follow-up actions taken by the organisations concerned in implementing The Ombudsman's recommendations. It is a measure of the seriousness with which the Administration views the role and recommendations of The Ombudsman in promoting open and fair, responsive and responsible government.

Implementation of Recommendations

6.6 Properly conducted investigations and carefully considered recommendations are key to our work processes. An indicator of our achievement is the number of recommendations for improvement made by me and adopted for implementation by the organisations. In the 2004/05 reporting year, my Office completed full investigation of 125 cases and five direct investigations, with 198 and 72 recommendations respectively making a total of 270. 263 (or 97.4%) of them have been accepted by the organisations concerned; 6 (or 2.2%) are still under consideration. Each recommendation, when implemented, should result in improvement to public administration and better service to the community.

6.7 However, I am only too well aware that even the best-intentioned and most well-devised measures ultimately rest on the organisations concerned. Here, I refer to the determination of the leadership and the cooperation of the corporate whole.

6.8 This year, we concluded 1,873 cases after preliminary inquiries, including 209 cases by INCH and 1,664 by RAC, with a total of 181 suggestions for remedial actions or administrative improvement. We note that oftentimes organisations would conduct its own internal audit and even introduce improvement measures in the course of our investigation. In such cases, we act practically as a catalyst for change. We welcome and appreciate such "headstart" by the organisations. In this connection, we must pay tribute to complainants for bringing their cases forward, thus contributing to the improvement of public services.

Enhancement of Quality Administration

6.9 In implementing our recommendations and suggestions, the organisations concerned enhance public administration and improve services. The following are examples in a number of areas.

(1) Guidelines for clarity, consistency or efficiency in operation

Complainant had suffered financial loss as a result of a criminal act by an individual, who was subsequently successfully prosecuted. The court made a criminal bankruptcy order against the individual, with Complainant named as a creditor. The order, in written form, then had to be prepared by the prosecution or an interested party, for signing by the judge and then sealed. However, a year passed with no order being prepared by any party. Complainant was lost as to how to follow up the order.

Our inquiry noted that, although Complainant's solicitors could have prepared the order, the prosecution, viz the Department of Justice ("D of J"), should be best placed to do this. Yet, no procedure was laid down for this. On our suggestion to review procedures, D of J issued a Legal Circular requiring all prosecution counsel to prepare the order, subject to any other direction from the court. They should also give appropriate notification to creditors named in the order.

(2) Better arrangements for inter-departmental co-ordination

Complainant was greatly disturbed by the noise from festive activities late at night. He had complained to the Leisure and Cultural Services Department ("LCSD") and the Environmental Protection Department ("EPD") but, as the activities were for local traditions, the two departments only took advisory action. As a result, the nuisance remained unabated.

On our suggestion, LCSD established a joint task force with EPD, the Home Affairs Department and the Police. They worked out guidelines and action plans with the festival organisers to ensure that the activities concluded by 11 p.m.

(3) Measures for better public enquiry/ complaint handling

Complainant had complained against a Government department to the General Office of the Chief Executive's Office ("GOCEO"). In an interim reply, GOCEO said it had referred the matter to the relevant bureau for direct reply but did not identify which bureau. On receiving no substantive reply after a long while, Complainant considered GOCEO had not taken his complaint seriously.

Our inquiry found that after receiving the complaint, GOCEO had indeed referred the case to the relevant bureau but, owing to some misunderstanding, the bureau failed to reply. For greater transparency and accountability, we suggested GOCEO to indicate the relevant bureau or department giving the substantive reply. GOCEO accepted this arrangement.

(4) Training for staff

Complainant was the defendant in a Labour Tribunal claim filed by her ex-employee. Allegedly, in the pre-hearing conciliation, the tribunal officer had proposed terms of settlement on her behalf but without her consent. As this involved professional judgment and not administration, we did not pursue. Still, we conveyed Complainant's dissatisfaction to the Judiciary Administrator ("JA") and suggested conciliation training for tribunal officers.

JA accepted our suggestion and arranged conciliation training for nine of their tribunal officers. Thereafter, JA deployed six of them specifically to handle conciliation and provided suitable briefing for them.

(5) Measures for better services

Complainant bid for a shop unit in the commercial complex of a public housing estate but was unsuccessful. He later found that the successful bidder did not rent the shop unit, which then remained vacant for about half a year. Thereafter, Complainant again bid for other shop units of the commercial complex and had similar experience.

Our "inquiry" elsewhere found the Housing Department ("HD") too tolerant of procrastinating tactics of successful bidders, including dishonoured cheques, and slow on re-tendering of shop units. On our recommendation, HD introduced new measures to counter such tactics: including accepting only cash or cashier orders rather than personal cheques, increasing the amount of non-refundable deposits, accepting the second highest bidder when the successful bidder failed to rent the shop unit, streamlining the procedures for re-tendering and reminding staff to enforce strictly the terms and conditions of the tender documents.

(6) Clearer information to the public

Complainant made an appointment, through the Immigration Department ("ImmD") website, for changing his Identity Card ("ID card") to smart ID card. However, when he went to the specified ImmD office (Kowloon Office) on due date, the staff there told him that such service was not available there and suggested he go to a designated office.

Our inquiry found that the relevant page of the ImmD website cited two types of appointments: one for applying for new ID cards, re-issue of ID cards or changing personal data on the ID card; and the other for changing to smart ID cards. Complainant had mistakenly made an appointment for new ID card. To guide citizens better, ImmD accepted our suggestion to improve its website.

6.10 Apart from improving the quality of public administration, our work has also helped to safeguard human rights. Hong Kong abides by a number of international human rights treaties including the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment. Like our counterparts overseas, this Office has an important duty to promote and protect human rights, particularly for the vulnerable such as inmates in institutions under the Correctional Services Department ("CSD").

6.11 We have received complaints from such inmates on a variety of issues alleging threat to safety, inadequate medical care, unfair treatment, frequency of visits, screening of incoming materials and personal comforts. Though some of the allegations may not be supported by concrete evidence, we are mindful of the fact that the inmates are kept in an enclosed environment without normal access to information and other resources. We, therefore, handle all such complaints with due care and compassion. This year, we completed a full investigation which resulted in recommendations to CSD for strengthening security measures to protect inmates from being attacked by peers.

Comments on Our Services

6.12 From time to time, complainants address us with their comments about our findings or our procedures and practices. Invariably, we conduct internal audit, revising our operations where appropriate. We regard constructive comments on our services as reminders for review and reform.

6.13 Occasionally, we receive messages of appreciation from complainants and organisations, e.g. on the thoroughness and impartiality of our investigations (Fig. 6.3). We value such encouragement and we endeavour to further improve our services.

Fig. 6.3

Extracts from letters of appreciation

Positive Complaint Culture

6.14 Unquestionably, complaints originate from grievance or dissatisfaction but this does not render complaints necessarily a negative product. A complaint made in good faith is due exercise of a citizen's rights. A valid complaint enables Government to re-visit policies, procedures and practices with The Ombudsman as referee. Complaints are opportunities to review and revamp, redress and reform. Public administration should evolve, develop and progress. Both the public and the Administration should realise, and appreciate, the positive value of criticism and complaints about deficiencies in the public service. The examples in para. 6.9 are but a few instances in illustration.

6.15 In our efforts to promote a positive complaint culture within both the Administration and our community at large, we have devoted much time and resources to activities for public awareness and education. These are described in Chapter 7.

Note 1: The total number of enquiries and complaints received in Table 1 are 11,742 and 4,654 respectively. They are different from the figures shown in Table 3 for the following reasons:

- An enquiry/complaint involving more than one organisation is shown against each of the organisation.
- Enquiries/complaints involving bodies outside The Ombudsman's jurisdiction are not shown.

Note 2: Organisations under Schedule 1 to The Ombudsman Ordinance with no enquiries/complaints received in the reporting year are not shown.

Note 3: The Hong Kong Sports Development Board was dissolved on 1 October 2004.

Note 4: Civil Engineering Department and Territory Development Department were incorporated to become Civil Engineering and Development Department on 1 July 2004.

Office of The Ombudsman

Complaint

A complaint is a specific allegation against one or more organisations, or the staff, for any wrong doing, unreasonable action or defective decision which affects and aggrieves the complainant either personally as an individual or collectively as a body corporate.

Direct Investigation

This refers to an investigation into matters of a systemic nature or wide community concern, initiated under section 7(1) of The Ombudsman Ordinance in the absence of a complaint.

Direct Investigation Assessment

This refers to the examination of an issue in the public interest or of community concern identified as a potential subject for direct investigation. Such assessment includes collection of background information, appraisal of the extent of public concern and consideration of any remedial action by the relevant authorities. This is sometimes dubbed “a mini direct investigation”.

Discontinuation of Complaint

This refers to the cessation of inquiries into a complaint, under section 7(i) or section 11A of The Ombudsman Ordinance. This may be for the reasons set out in section 8 (read in conjunction with Schedule 2) or section 10 of the Ordinance identified after inquiries have commenced or such factors as insufficient information or evidence from complainants and lack of complainants’ consent for access to their personal information.

Enquiry

An enquiry is a request to this Office for information or advice. It is not a complaint.

Full Investigation

This refers to an investigation initiated under section 7(1) of The Ombudsman Ordinance upon receipt of a complaint.

Incapable of Determination

This refers to the situation where a case is inconclusive at the end of a full investigation. No conclusion can be drawn on the complaint because the evidence is conflicting, irreconcilable, incomplete or lacking in corroboration from independent witnesses.

Internal Complaint Handling Programme (“INCH”)

This refers to a form of preliminary inquiries whereby a simple case is referred, with the consent of the complainant, to the organisation concerned for investigation and reply direct to the complainant, with a copy to The Ombudsman. In such cases, The Ombudsman may request the organisation to provide specific information in its reply, monitors the progress and scrutinises the reply, intervening where the reply is not satisfactory.

Investigation

This refers to an investigation under section 7(1) of The Ombudsman Ordinance. It may be a full investigation into a complaint or a direct investigation without a complaint.

Maladministration

This is defined in section 2 of The Ombudsman Ordinance. Basically, it means bad, inefficient or improper administration and includes: unreasonable conduct; abuse of power or authority; unreasonable, unjust, oppressive or improperly discriminatory procedures and delay; discourtesy and lack of consideration for an affected person.

Mediation

This refers to a voluntary process carried out under section 11B of The Ombudsman Ordinance where the complainant and the representative of the organisation concerned meet voluntarily to explore a mutually acceptable solution to a problem. Investigators from this Office act as impartial facilitators.

Outside Jurisdiction

This refers to the situation where an action is not subject to investigation by The Ombudsman by reason of section 8 read with Schedule 2 to The Ombudsman Ordinance.

Partially Substantiated

This refers to the degree to which an action / inaction / decision under complaint is found, at the end of a full investigation, to be within the meaning of “maladministration” as defined in section 2 of The Ombudsman Ordinance. If maladministration is found in only one or some of the aspects, the complaint is partially substantiated.

Potential Complaint

This refers to a complaint addressed to an organisation and only copied to The Ombudsman. Such cases are regarded as not meant for action at all or not for the time being. However, The Ombudsman may intervene if the organisation concerned fails to follow up appropriately.

Preliminary Inquiries

These refer to inquiries conducted under section 11A of The Ombudsman Ordinance to determine whether a full investigation should be conducted.

Rendering Assistance/Clarification ("RAC")

This refers to a form of preliminary inquiries under which this Office collects from the organisation under complaint all facts that appear to be relevant. If the facts fully explain the matter under complaint, the findings and observations will be presented to the complainant, with suggestions to the organisation concerned on remedial action and improvement, where appropriate. If further inquiry is called for, a full investigation will be conducted.

Restrictions on Investigation

These refer to the restrictions on investigation set out in section 10 of The Ombudsman Ordinance.

Substantiated

This refers to the degree to which the action / inaction / decision under complaint is found, at the end of a full investigation, to be within the meaning of "maladministration" as defined in section 2 of The Ombudsman Ordinance. If all aspects taken together show that there is maladministration, the complaint is substantiated.

Substantiated other than Alleged

This refers to the situation where The Ombudsman finds a complainant's allegations to be unsubstantiated but in the course of investigation, discovers other aspects of significant maladministration. In such a case, The Ombudsman will criticise those other deficiencies, even in the absence of a specific complaint on those points, and conclude the case as substantiated other than alleged.

Unsubstantiated

This refers to the degree to which the action / inaction / decision under complaint is found, at the end of a full investigation, to be within the meaning of "maladministration" as defined in section 2 of The Ombudsman Ordinance. If no maladministration is found, the complaint is unsubstantiated.

Withdrawal of Complaint

This refers to a complainant voluntarily withdrawing a case. However, The Ombudsman may decide to continue the investigation if its nature or gravity should so warrant.

Under section 7(1)(a)(ii) of The Ombudsman Ordinance, The Ombudsman is empowered to initiate investigations of his own volition, even though no complaint on the matter has been received.

This power enables The Ombudsman to be more proactive in the approach to problems of wide public interest and concern. It is particularly useful to:

- (a) follow through systemic problems which investigation of a complaint alone may not resolve;
- (b) nip problems in the bud by addressing deficiencies in systems and procedures; and
- (c) resolve repeated complaints, once and for all, by addressing the fundamental problems which may not be the subject of complaints, but are believed or suspected to be the underlying reasons for complaint.

To facilitate consideration of matters for direct investigation, The Ombudsman has established some general guidelines:

- (a) the matter concerns public administration and involve alleged or suspected maladministration as defined in The Ombudsman Ordinance;
- (b) the matter should be of sufficient dimension and complexity, representing the general interest, desire or expectation of the community, or at least a sector in the community;
- (c) individual grievances will normally not be a candidate for direct investigation, as there is no reason why the individual concerned cannot come lodge a complaint personally;
- (d) a complaint will otherwise not be actionable under the restrictions in section 10(1) of The Ombudsman Ordinance, e.g. anonymous complainant, not the aggrieved person, but the matter is nevertheless of grave concern to The Ombudsman;
- (e) the matter is normally not subject to the jurisdiction of the Court or a tribunal constituted under any Ordinance or it would not be reasonable to expect the affected person(s) to resort to the Court or any tribunal for remedy; and
- (f) the time is opportune for a direct investigation, weighing against the consequences of not doing so.

These are no more than guidelines and are by no means exhaustive. Much will depend on the actual matter or problems.

Cases Concluded under Internal Complaint Handling Programme

AIRPORT AUTHORITY (“AA”)

Case No. OMB 2004/3408

AA – airport management – failing to stop touting activities by taxi drivers at the airport terminal

The complainant was approached by a man at the arrival hall of the airport terminal offering discounted taxi fares. He rejected the offer but the man continued to follow and harass him. He considered AA to have failed in its duty to stop touting activities.

2. AA apologised to the complainant. It had conducted such measures as daily anti-touting operations. It had also been discussing with the Transport Department, the Police and representatives of some 40 taxi associations about tightening control. Joint operations with the Police had resulted in the interception of many touting activities.

3. The Authority also launched publicity campaigns regularly, including announcement through the public address system and distribution of leaflets, to advise airport users against accepting illegal services provided by touts.

4. The tout in this case had been arrested and sentenced to one month's imprisonment, the maximum term under the Airport Authority Bylaw. Meanwhile, AA was studying the possibility of raising the penalty for further deterrent.

FOOD AND ENVIRONMENTAL HYGIENE DEPARTMENT (“FEHD”)

Case No. OMB 2004/3063

FEHD – complaint handling – failing to properly handle repeated complaints about water dripping from an air-conditioner above the complainant's flat

The complainant allegedly had telephoned FEHD a number of times to complain about water dripping from an air-conditioner of a flat upstairs. However, she did not receive any response and the Department did not contact her for follow-up. The problem persisted for more than a year as a result.

2. FEHD records showed that the complainant had called the Department several times in June and July 2003 regarding the problem. FEHD had promptly sent staff to conduct an inspection each time. Although they did not see water dripping, they still advised the owners of the flats upstairs to ensure proper maintenance of their air-conditioners and the rubber hoses, to avoid nuisance caused by water dripping. No sign of water dripping was detected in subsequent inspections from August to November and the complainant indicated that the situation was satisfactory.

3. In July 2004, the complainant complained again about the same problem. FEHD staff conducted a site inspection and found only the air-conditioner of the flat immediately above connected to a drip tray and a rubber hose to collect water droplets into a bucket. Later, the complainant made the same complaints but still FEHD staff found no water dripping when they went over to investigate. The complainant agreed to call the Department at once when she saw water dripping from the air conditioner.
4. In early September, FEHD staff went to the complainant's flat 15 minutes after receiving her call but still did not find any water dripping from the air conditioner upstairs. Nevertheless, as it was still connected to a drip tray and a rubber hose, the staff advised the owner to make improvement.
5. Against the background above, FEHD had actually followed up on the complaints. It was just that no water was found dripping despite repeated inspections. Nevertheless, its staff only informed the complainant's mother of the result after each inspection but did not reply to the complainant. They undertook to contact the complainant herself in future.
6. On the other hand, we noticed that FEHD staff only jotted down "morning" or "afternoon" as the time of inspection in the records. At our suggestions, the Department issued new guidelines to remind staff to record the exact time and all details of visits for easier follow-up.

LANDS DEPARTMENT ("Lands D")

Case No. OMB 2004/4374

Lands D – assignment of banner site – allowing a District Councillor to assign a designated roadside spot to another party for displaying a publicity banner

The complainant alleged that a District Lands Office under Lands D had allowed a District Councillor to assign a designated roadside spot to another party for displaying a publicity banner. Moreover, the officer answering her complaint had failed to be impartial and to clearly identify himself as a public officer.

2. On referral by this Office, Lands D reviewed the case against its Implementation Guidelines and confirmed that such assignment had contravened the Guidelines. On the Department's advice, the party concerned removed the banner. As regards the officer's misinterpretation of the Guidelines and failure to clearly identify himself, the Department had cautioned him and issued an apology to the complainant.

REGISTRATION AND ELECTORAL OFFICE ("REO")

Case No. OMB 2004/3619

REO – voting procedures – unreasonable refusal by staff at a polling station to accept the complainant's driving licence as proof of his identity

On 12 September 2004, the complainant went to cast his vote in the Legislative Council Election. He presented his driving licence but staff at the polling station allegedly refused to issue a ballot paper as his driving licence carried no photograph and could not prove his identity.

2. The REO "Guide on Voting" (the "Guide") sent to voters stated that a voter must bring along his/her "Hong Kong Identity Card ("HKID") or other identity document when visiting the polling station in person". However, it did not mention that such "other document" must carry a photograph of the bearer. The complainant, therefore, considered the action of the staff concerned inappropriate.

3. REO explained that in general only a document with a photograph of the bearer can be regarded as proof of identity. Staff at polling stations could identify from a HKID with a photograph whether or not the bearer was indeed the voter. However, this was not the case with a driving licence without a photograph of its bearer. The decision not to issue a ballot paper to the complainant was, therefore, appropriate.

4. Nevertheless, REO undertook to revise the Guide to read "a voter must bring along his/her HKID or other identity document bearing a photograph of the voter when visiting the polling station in person". It also apologised in writing to the complainant for the inconvenience caused.

Cases Concluded under Rendering Assistance/Clarification

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND CONSERVATION DEPARTMENT ("AFCD") AND EFFICIENCY UNIT ("EU")

Case Nos. OMB 2004/0169; OMB 2004/1608

AFCD – processing of licence application – delay over the complainant's application for Animal Trading Licence

EU – handling of enquiry – providing wrong information on the status of the application

The complainant applied to AFCD for an Animal Trading Licence in mid-October 2003 to sell birds in his pet products shop. He alleged that despite three site inspections, the Department had still not issued the licence by the end of December. When he telephoned the AFCD hotline to enquire about progress, the staff first replied that the licence had been approved, but later that his application was still being processed. The licence was eventually issued to him in January 2004.

2. The complainant alleged that there had been delay on the part of AFCD in processing his application and that its staff had given him wrong information.

3. AFCD explained that as the shop was located inside a commercial building, assessment procedures for the application were different from ordinary cases. Besides site inspections to ensure that the shop facilities met the standard requirements, the Department had to check whether the shop would contravene any rules or regulations of that commercial building and to consider any additional clauses for inclusion in issuing the licence. Consequently, it took longer to process the complainant's application.

4. This Office considered AFCD to have been proactive in processing the complainant's application. To prevent avian flu and to protect public health, the Department was justifiably cautious in processing the licence application. It was a prudent and reasonable move.

5. The AFCD hotline was actually answered by staff of the Integrated Call Centre of EU under the Government Secretariat. EU admitted that the staff answering the complainant's call had misread the e-mail message from the Department in response to the enquiry and mistaken the licence to have been issued. As she discovered her mistake 20 minutes later and called the complainant at once, this should not affect his application. EU had instructed the staff concerned to handle enquiries carefully.

6. AFCD and EU had apologised to the complainant and undertook to improve their communications.

DEPARTMENT OF HEALTH ("DH")

Case No. OMB 2004/1402

DH – dental treatment – (a) providing pulp treatment to the complainant's daughter without her prior consent; (b) failing to check if her daughter was allergic to medication before treatment; and (c) allowing an unqualified dental therapist to perform the operation on her daughter

The complainant's daughter joined the School Dental Care Service ("SDCS") offered by DH and had a check-up at its dental clinic. The dental therapist, on detecting decay in three of her upper teeth requiring fillings, performed oral hygiene instruction, tooth brushing under supervision and filling of the decayed teeth. When the decay was removed, the teeth were found to require pulpotomy. The first stage of pulpotomy was then performed by a senior dental therapist.

2. DH records showed that the complainant had been informed of the scope of the service and composition of its professional team when her daughter enrolled in the scheme. Pulp treatment was within the scope of basic dental treatment. By signing the Application and Consent Form for School Dental Care Service, the complainant had consented to dental treatment considered necessary for her daughter. However, she did not indicate that her daughter was allergic to any medication. The pulpotomy was performed by a qualified professional with proper authorisation. DH had also informed the complainant of the dental treatment performed via her daughter's SDCS handbook and the "post pulp treatment care" instruction card.

3. This Office considered that DH had followed established procedures. Nevertheless, relying simply on the parents' blanket consent, given at the beginning of the school year, to all basic dental treatment may not be satisfactory. To protect young patients' rights, The Ombudsman suggested that DH inform parents beforehand of any irreversible treatment to be performed on their children and that parents provide their children's latest health condition when deliberating and deciding on any treatment. DH agreed to enhance public education and publicity and strengthen communication with parents on this.

FIRE SERVICES DEPARTMENT ("FSD")

FSD – complaint handling – (a) not taking the initiative to inform the complainant of its follow-up action; (b) providing inaccurate information in its reply; and (c) failing to respond properly to the complainant's telephone enquiries

The complainant, representing a property management company, alleged that the main door of a flat in a private building had been replaced with a wooden board, constituting a fire hazard. The complainant had telephoned to report to FSD in early January 2004, but the Department had not taken the initiative to inform him of its follow-up action, or conducted inspections conscientiously. FSD indicated in its reply of 1 June that inspections had been carried out. Nevertheless, the complainant indicated that there were discrepancies between its inspection report and the actual situation. He was also dissatisfied that an officer of FSD's Building Improvement and Support Division ("Building Division") had not properly handled his company's telephone enquiries.

Complaint (a)

2. FSD classified the case as a "fire hazard" after a site inspection in early January and sent an advisory letter to the flat owner, followed by a "Fire Hazard Abatement Notice" in early April requiring him to remove the hazard in 30 days. On 11 May, the Building Division found that a solid wooden door had been installed, thus abating the fire hazard.

3. FSD staff had twice replied to the telephone enquiries from another staff member ("Ms A") of the property management company in late January and early April. As subsequent action would involve legal procedures and the privacy of a third party, details were not divulged to the complainant in accordance with usual practice.

4. This Office considered that FSD had followed departmental guidelines in handling the complaint. In its letter of 1 June 2004, it had also explained to the complainant the reasons for not providing details of its action. However, the Department agreed that the officer concerned was perfunctory and too passive in responding to telephone enquiries. It had, therefore, given him appropriate instructions.

Complaint (b)

5. An FSD officer had conducted an inspection on 19 February. As he could not contact the flat owner immediately, he wrote his inspection report on 24 February and noted that as the inspection date. FSD had given him proper instruction to prevent recurrence.

6. Furthermore, the complainant alleged that the flat owner had not installed a solid wooden door by 12 May. FSD had checked its records and confirmed that the door had been installed on 30 April. Nonetheless, workers had removed it several times between 11 and 27 May to facilitate renovation of the flat.

Complaint (c)

7. Ms A had called the FSD hotline in late January and complained against an officer of the Building Division for failing to refer her enquiry to the subject officer and to reply to her before the end of the day as promised. The Acting Station Officer had immediately explained and apologised to her and thought that her dissatisfaction had been addressed. FSD had instructed its staff to handle complaints more carefully.

8. FSD had set up a working group after the incident to review the procedures, guidelines and staff training relating to the handling of public enquiries. New guidelines had since been drawn up.

HIGHWAYS DEPARTMENT ("Hy D"), HOME AFFAIRS DEPARTMENT ("HAD"), LANDS DEPARTMENT ("Lands D"), PLANNING DEPARTMENT ("Plan D"), TRANSPORT DEPARTMENT ("TD") AND ENVIRONMENTAL PROTECTION DEPARTMENT ("EPD")

Case Nos. OMB 2004/1682 - 1687; OMB 2004/1706 - 1717;
OMB 2004/1724 - 1729; OMB 2004/1742 - 1747;
OMB 2004/1754 - 1759; and others

Hy D, HAD, Lands D, Plan D, TD and EPD – land use – failing to consult local residents before changing the land use of a site and causing them nuisance

Some residents of a private housing estate ("Estate A") complained against the above departments for failing to consult local residents before using a site nearby ("Site B") as a truck loading/unloading area and depot for an infrastructural development project ("the Project") elsewhere, which caused them nuisance.

Actions by the Departments

2. Precast segments for a flyover under the Project were to be delivered from the Mainland to Hong Kong by barge. Hy D, therefore, needed a barging point to receive them before transportation to the works area. Prior to designating Site B as the barging point and depot, the Department had, through HAD's District Office ("DO"), consulted the District Council ("DC"), local organisations and neighbouring housing estates. It had accommodated some of their demands by retaining the existing activities on site and reducing the area of the depot. It had also responded to each of the four written submissions from residents and the Customer Service Centre of Estate A.
3. As regards transportation of the segments, Hy D, after consulting the DC Traffic and Transport Committee ("TTC") and the residents, initially arranged to deliver them first to an intermediate site, then to the works site at night via Street C where Estate A was situated. As residents in the vicinity of Street C were still concerned about the impact of such arrangement, Hy D decided to deliver the segments by sea and other roads instead. A trial run proved to be smooth, witnessed by members of a monitoring group under TTC and residents' representatives. The route was, therefore, adopted and any impact on the residents eliminated.
4. DO had consulted DC and residents several times in different ways regarding these arrangements and conveyed the views to the departments concerned. DO staff had in fact sought the views of the residents of Estate A both before (through the estate sales office) and after they moved in.
5. Lands D was responsible for approving land use applications. Upon receipt of Hy D's application for using Site B as a barging point and depot for three and a half years, Lands D consulted HAD, Plan D, TD and EPD. It met with them, residents and District Councillors. Taking into account the views received, Lands D cut the period of use by one year and reduced the site area so that the existing activities could continue.
6. Plan D did not object to Hy D's application, since under its policy, short-term use for less than five years need not conform to the land use designated by the Outline Zoning Plan.
7. TD had no objection to Hy D's application because Street C had sufficient spare capacity for the delivery vehicles. Moreover, Hy D had reserved enough space for parking and cargo handling and had designated vehicular access points so as to minimise the impact on neighbouring roads. In fact, the delivery of segments by land had never adversely affected the traffic flow on Street C.

8. EPD had issued an environmental permit for the Project to Hy D with conditions including restrictions on the time of operation, the equipment to be used and the arrangements for storage. As the works conformed to the requirements of the technical memorandum issued under the Environmental Impact Assessment Ordinance, EPD believed that these measures were enough to contain the impact on the environment. Subsequently, on Hy D application, EPD issued an amended permit to enable the retention of the existing activities on site.

Observations and Opinions

9. This Office considered that the six departments had followed their policies and procedures in handling the change of land use of Site B. Local residents had been duly consulted and their views largely accepted as illustrated by the reduction of the site area and the period of use as well as the change of the route for delivery. As a result, the residents of Estate A and others along Street C were no longer affected by the traffic.

HOME AFFAIRS DEPARTMENT ("HAD")

HAD – financial assistance to mutual aid committee – refusing to reimburse the expenses of a mutual aid committee

A mutual aid committee ("MAC") complained that the notes to the "Application for Financial Assistance by Mutual Aid Committee" were misleading and that HAD had unreasonably rejected its application for quarterly reimbursement of expenses.

2. Having set up its office in October 2003, the MAC claimed reimbursement of expenses amounting to $1,999.60 from HAD in January 2004. This was reimbursed in full in mid-February. Nevertheless, its application for reimbursement of expenses in January to March made in April 2004 was rejected.

3. HAD explained that its financial assistance to a MAC was up to $1,000 per quarter. In the case of setting up a new office, a MAC may claim reimbursement up to $2,000 for two quarters at the same time. As the complainant had been given such financial assistance for two quarters in February, no further reimbursement could be made for expenses of the quarter January to March.

4. HAD admitted that the notes to the application form were not clear and had accordingly revised the wording. It had also apologised to the complainant.

HONGKONG POST (“HK Post”)

Case No. OMB 2003/4173

HK Post – payment service – failing to keep proper record of payment received and to respond to the complainant’s enquiries

The complainant claimed that he had received a ticket for violation of traffic regulations and paid the fine at a post office the next day. However, he later received a Notice Demanding Payment of Fixed Penalty from the Police, saying that the fine had not been settled. He enquired with the Central Traffic Prosecutions Bureau of the Police and the post office concerned. As he had lost his receipt, both departments indicated that they could not follow up his enquiries and he had to pay the fine once more. Aggrieved, he lodged a complaint with this Office.

2. Investigation by HK Post found that the complainant’s vehicle had actually been issued with two tickets for illegal parking at different times at the same location on the same day. HK Post explained that post office staff handling payments would input relevant data of a bill such as the serial number, the amount billed, the payment date, the receiving post office and the actual amount received into the PayThruPost computer system. However, the system did not record the vehicle registration mark. In this light, as the complainant was not able to produce the receipt, HK Post could not follow up further.

3. Meanwhile, the Central Traffic Prosecutions Bureau indicated that if an offender had settled the fixed penalty, it would not have issued a demand note. As the complainant was served with two fixed penalty notices, he had to pay twice.

HOSPITAL AUTHORITY (“HA”)

HA – medical prescription – directing the orthopaedists at a public hospital not to prescribe certain medication while other specialists were allowed to do so

When the complainant had a follow-up consultation at an HA hospital, the orthopaedist told him that a certain drug might help his condition but the hospital did not have the supply. The complainant later learned from the hospital’s pharmacy that the drug was available but orthopaedists could not prescribe it while other specialists could. He considered that the orthopaedist had cheated him. He also complained that the hospital’s reply did not provide the contact telephone number of the signing officer.

2. HA explained that the orthopaedists at that hospital were no longer prescribing the drug because it had no specific medical efficacy. The Authority indicated that it was a clinical decision made by the orthopaedics department of the hospital, not an administrative directive. Nevertheless, the hospital apologised to the complainant for any misunderstanding caused.

3. HA further stated that the complainant could contact the signing officer by calling the main switchboard at the hospital. The hospital undertook to provide the telephone number of the Patient Relations Officer in all future correspondence with patients for easy contact.

4. This Office would not comment on the orthopaedics department's decision not to prescribe the drug because it was purely a clinical judgement and not an administrative matter. Nevertheless, we believed that the orthopaedist had not cheated the complainant.

HOUSING DEPARTMENT ("HD")

HD – recladding of external walls – (a) failure to reclad the external walls of a building with tiles of a similar colour, thereby affecting its appearance; and (b) delay in handling the complainant's enquiries

HD had reclad the external walls of a building in a public housing estate with tiles of a different colour, giving the excuse that tiles of the original colour were out of stock. The complainant complained to HD by e-mail about this and other estate management issues. He was not satisfied with the Department's preliminary reply and failure to follow up on his second enquiry.

Complaint (a)

2. HD explained that as it had trusted its contractor to exercise "professional judgement" and choose tiles of a "similar" colour, it did not specify the colour of the tiles in the contract. HD held that the tiles chosen by the contractor complied with the specifications and looked "similar" to the original colour of the building. HD considered it acceptable for the contractor to launch the works as soon as possible, for fear of seepage and structural damage to the building, rather than taking more time to source tiles of the original colour.

3. We noted that HD had indeed not specified the colour of the tiles. While we appreciated the need to complete the works as soon as possible, the appearance of the building should not be sacrificed.

4. This Office considered that HD had relied too much on the "professional judgement" of the contractor. HD should learn from the incident and take the initiative to restore the walls with appropriate tiles or explore other possible remedies with the residents.

Complaint (b)

5. HD received the complainant's first e-mail enquiry in late November 2003 and e-mailed him in acknowledgement the next day. Meanwhile, his enquiry was referred to the property management company for action. The company replied in early December. As the complainant considered his questions not fully answered, he sent another e-mail to HD asking for more details. The Department sent him an acknowledgement the next day and a substantive reply on 29 December.

6. As HD had complied with its performance pledge by replying all within 21 days, this Office considered that there had been no delay.

HOUSING DEPARTMENT ("HD")

Case No. OMB 2004/0095

HD – maintenance service – failing to monitor a shopping centre management company properly, thus causing delay in repairs

The complainant claimed that she had fallen from the staircase of a shopping centre in a housing estate. She attributed the accident to a damaged escalator having been out of service for several months so that she had to use the staircase instead. She had asked the management company to repair the escalator as soon as possible. However, it ignored her request. She, therefore, lodged a complaint against HD for failing to monitor the management company properly, resulting in delay in repairs.

2. According to HD, after the escalator was damaged in an accident, the single operator of the shopping centre and the management company notified the maintenance contractor for repairs. However, the contractor did not follow up, so the single operator issued a reminder to the contractor. Meanwhile, notices were posted near the escalator explaining the suspension of service and suggesting use of the lift adjacent to the shopping centre.

3. HD further explained that the escalator had remained out of service for more than two months because the maintenance contractor had failed to place orders for the spare parts early and the single operator and management company had not followed up the case closely. In this connection, HD had instructed the management company to follow up any future maintenance works actively to ensure quick restoration of services.

4. HD's appraisal report on the management company showed that the Department had recorded the company's dereliction of duty for future contract consideration. However, we considered that the single operator should also be penalised. Furthermore, as HD had been well aware of the prolonged disruption of escalator service, it should have taken the initiative and urged the management company to expedite repairs.

IMMIGRATION DEPARTMENT ("Imm D") AND LEGAL AID DEPARTMENT ("LAD")

Case Nos. OMB 2004/2347 - 2348

Imm D – marriage registration application – failing to provide reasons in writing for refusal to process the complainant's application for marriage registration

LAD – legal aid application – failing to take the initiative to understand Marriage Registry's reasons for refusal

The complainant married a Thai national in Thailand in 1991 and then returned to settle in Hong Kong. In 2002, he obtained a Certificate of Registration of Divorce ("the Certificate") from the Thai Consulate General in Hong Kong certifying that he had divorced his wife.

2. In January 2004, the complainant applied at a Marriage Registry ("the Registry") of Imm D to marry again. However, the Registry rejected the Certificate as a valid proof of his divorce and refused to process his application. The complainant was advised to apply to the court for a divorce decree first.

3. In early February 2004, the complainant applied to LAD for legal aid for his divorce petition but was refused because the Certificate was documentary proof of his divorce. LAD considered it unnecessary for him to get a divorce decree.

4. In June 2004, the complainant applied for marriage registration with the Registry again but was refused for the same reason. He again applied for legal aid for divorce petition but LAD asked him to obtain from the Registry in writing its reasons for refusing to process his application for marriage registration.

5. The complainant then telephoned the Registry for assistance. Imm D staff asked to speak to the responsible LAD lawyer direct but LAD staff refused to do so. The Registry, therefore, refused to give the reasons in writing as they could not ascertain what information was required by LAD.

6. The complainant considered both the Registry and LAD to be shirking their responsibility. He felt "caught in the middle" by them, each holding a different interpretation of the law.

7. On the basis of legal advice from the Department of Justice, Imm D considered that a divorce registered at the Thai Consulate General in Hong Kong could not be regarded as valid. The complainant was required to apply to the court in Thailand or in Hong Kong to obtain a divorce decree before he could register his marriage in Hong Kong.

8. This Office considered the Registry staff to be acting prudently in accordance with the law. It was not unreasonable for them to refuse to give "reasons in writing" as they did not know what was required by LAD. On the other hand, LAD had failed to take the initiative to understand the reasons held by the Registry. It was indeed bureaucratic and passive, showing a lack of consideration for clients.

9. LAD issued guidelines to instruct staff to be more proactive in processing legal aid applications and to take the initiative in assisting applicants. It also issued a written apology to the complainant.

JUDICIARY

Judiciary – delivery of documents – delay in delivering an order to the complainant so that she was unable to appeal in time

The complainant was the defendant in a small claims case. As she did not attend the hearing, the Adjudicator at the Small Claims Tribunal (“the Tribunal”) ruled in favour of the claimant. The complainant alleged that since the Tribunal had delayed the delivery of the order to her, she was not able to lodge an appeal within the seven-day period. The complainant was also dissatisfied with the Tribunal for the errors in three letters sent to her. She considered this to be negligence of the staff.

2. The Judiciary clarified that the Tribunal had followed established procedures to refer the notices and order to the relevant officer for verification and for the Adjudicator’s approval. After the signature by the Adjudicator, the documents were issued to both the claimant and the defendant concurrently. There was no delay in sending them to the complainant.

3. According to records, the Adjudicator allowed her appeal out of time on condition that she first paid a $25,000 deposit to the court. The Judiciary indicated that the complainant’s appeal was dismissed because she had failed to pay the deposit. It had nothing to do with the date the order was issued. As regards the errors in its letters to the complainant, the Judiciary admitted negligence. The staff concerned were duly advised and an apology was issued to the complainant.

4. As it was impossible to ascertain when the Adjudicator had actually signed the order, this Office could not comment whether there was delay in delivery. The Judiciary Administrator was urged to review and improve the workflow for the serving of orders by the Tribunal to ensure delivery to both parties before the appeal period expired. If necessary, they should consider amending the legislation to extend the time limit.

LABOUR DEPARTMENT ("LD")

Case No. OMB 2004/1462

LD – training scheme – mistakenly issuing a registration card to someone not eligible for the Graduate Employment Training Scheme

The complainant, a property services company, alleged that it had applied to LD on 3 May 2004 for a training allowance when it employed Madam A, holder of a valid registration card issued by the Department under the Graduate Employment Training Scheme ("the Scheme"). However, it was informed on the following day that it could not get the allowance because Madam A was not eligible for the Scheme and that the registration card had been issued by mistake.

2. The Scheme aimed to assist university graduates of 2003 to secure employment but did not cover holders of a master's degree. Employers who provided on-the-job training to fresh university graduates would be paid a monthly training allowance of $2,000 for each trainee engaged, up to a maximum of six months. The Scheme operated for 12 months and was discontinued on 30 June 2004.

3. When Madam A applied for enrolment in the Scheme at an LD office on 30 April 2004, she insisted on being issued a registration card at once to save her the trouble of collecting it later. Without following the normal procedures, a clerical staff issued the card before her application was approved. That clerical staff reminded Madam A not to use the card until her application had been approved.

4. That day, LD found that Madam A had a master's degree and was, therefore, not eligible. An officer immediately called her to say that her application had been rejected. LD also sent her formal notification on 3 May.

5. Upon receipt of the application for training allowance for Madam A, LD informed the complainant on the same day by telephone that she was not eligible for the Scheme and subsequently sent a letter of rejection. Meanwhile, LD also wrote to Madam A requesting her to return the registration card as soon as possible.

6. LD emphasised that this was an isolated incident and had apologised to the complainant.

7. The Ombudsman suggested that LD remind staff to observe departmental guidelines and work procedures.

LEISURE AND CULTURAL SERVICES DEPARTMENT ("LCSD")

Case No. OMB 2004/1284

LCSD – library management – failing to handle properly a reader's request to call the police

While reading in a public library one evening over a weekend, the complainant found a girl making a lot of noise. He asked the girl's father to restrain his daughter but was assaulted. His request to the library staff to call the police was refused. He eventually called the police himself. He complained that LCSD had failed to manage its library effectively and was shirking responsibility.

2. LCSD explained that staff and security guards were deployed to patrol and maintain order in the library during opening hours. There were guidelines on this for staff. The Department explained that the direct supervisor, a professional Librarian, had been out for meal break at the material time. The staff had failed to report the incident immediately to other supervisory officers on duty (Assistant Librarian/Librarian) and had mishandled it. Apart from sending the complainant a written apology and arranging additional staff to patrol and maintain order during peak periods on weekends, LCSD had also reminded frontline staff of the proper procedures to handle such incidents as disputes among library users.

3. Nevertheless, this Office considered that LCSD's instructions to staff that the duty assistant librarian/librarian must be notified and prior approval of the senior librarian/chief librarian obtained before reporting any case to the police too rigid and bureaucratic. We urged the Department to review such procedures and guidelines to be more flexible.

MANDATORY PROVIDENT FUND SCHEMES AUTHORITY ("MPFA")

Case No. OMB 2004/0516

MPFA – MPF contributions – failing to monitor properly an approved trustee such that the complainant was unable to claim back the default MPF contributions from his ex-employer

The complainant stated that he had lodged a complaint with MPFA in June 2003 alleging that from October 2002 to May 2003, his ex-employer had not paid his employee's contributions to a mandatory provident fund ("MPF") scheme but continued to deduct $1,000 from his salary every month.

2. The complainant alleged that MPFA had failed to monitor properly the approved trustee of a provident fund scheme as well as the contributions by the ex-employer such that he was not able to claim back the default MPF contributions.

3. MPFA explained that according to its established policy, default cases would be handled according to different categories, viz. “non-payment” or “discrepancy”. For “non-payment” cases, a Notice of Default Contribution would be issued to request employers to pay all outstanding contributions plus a surcharge within a specified period upon notification by the trustee. Special MPFA teams would inspect frequent defaulters for enforcement purposes.

4. As regards “discrepancy” cases, MPFA investigations indicated that most of them were due to employers’ unintentional miscalculation. After clarification by the trustees, most employers would rectify the mistakes. MPFA, therefore, did not issue notices to the employers demanding contributions. However, MPFA would handle promptly any complaints received from the employees. It would also continue to monitor the situation through the trustees. With frequent cases of “discrepancy”, MPFA would initiate an inspection and issue reminders or warning letters to the employers concerned.

5. In this case, between October 2002 and May 2003, the approved trustee had complied with the law and made monthly submissions to MPFA on the ex-employer’s default contributions. It had issued written notices to require him to rectify the mistakes. However, as there was an error in the trustee’s computer system, the “non-payment” of the ex-employer had been wrongly categorised as “discrepancy”. As a result, MPFA had not issued a Notice of Default Contribution to or levied any surcharge on the ex-employer.

6. MPFA stated that well before the trustee submitted the reports on the ex-employer’s “discrepancy”, it had suspected there might be a problem in the trustee’s definition of “discrepancy” cases. Subsequently, MPFA conducted a survey by questionnaire among all the trustees in November 2002 to gauge their understanding of the definition. After analysing the data collected, MPFA decided to hold meetings with the trustees on their different interpretations of “discrepancy” in February 2003. However, the meetings were postponed due to the outbreak of the Severe Acute Respiratory Syndrome (“SARS”).

7. In late May 2003, when SARS subsided, a meeting was held with the trustee in which MPFA highlighted that the categorisation of “discrepancy” was incorrect. The trustee was urged to rectify its computer system immediately and to submit cases of “non-payment”, which had previously been wrongly reported as “discrepancy”, for appropriate enforcement action.

8. This Office considered that MPFA had complied with the legislation in monitoring the operations of trustees to gain a full picture of employers’ contributions. Meanwhile, it had also followed up the trustee’s incorrect categorisation of “discrepancy” cases. Although MPFA was well aware of the trustee’s misinterpretation, the situation was beyond its control as rectification of the computer system would take time whilst the outbreak of SARS was an unfortunate incident. Hence, there was no maladministration on the part of MPFA.

9. This Office urged MPFA to follow up promptly all “non-payment” cases wrongly reported as “discrepancy” to safeguard employees’ interests. Meanwhile, as a deterrent, it should consider levying appropriate penalties on the trustee for their mistakes.

RADIO TELEVISION HONG KONG ("RTHK")

Case No. OMB 2003/4304

RTHK – distribution of prizes – (a) delay in notifying the complainant to collect his prize; and (b) failing to respond to his enquiries

A Mainlander had won a prize in a radio programme of RTHK in August 2003. He complained that RTHK had delayed notifying him of the arrangement for collecting his prize and failed to respond to his telephone and e-mail enquiries.

2. RTHK explained that it had notified all Mainland winners by e-mail after the programme and asked them to provide personal particulars and indicate their choice of prize collection points. It was not until March 2004 that RTHK finally obtained the information from all winners. With the assistance of the programme sponsor, the prize collection points were confirmed and letters issued to the winners. The sponsor informed RTHK in April that the complainant had collected his prize.
3. RTHK staff could not recall whether the complainant had made any enquiries by telephone. Without independent evidence, this Office could not comment on this point.
4. The officer responsible for distribution of prizes said that she had sent several replies to the complainant's e-mail enquiries. However, as the e-mails had been deleted, RTHK was unable to ascertain what had actually occurred.
5. This Office also noticed that the e-mail notification to the complainant had been issued via the officer's personal e-mail account and she had not informed her successor about that e-mail. We considered such practices improper and suggested that RTHK formulate guidelines on the use of e-mail at work and remind staff to prepare detailed notes when handing over duties.
6. RTHK undertook to work out proper procedures accordingly.

TRANSPORT DEPARTMENT ("TD")

Case No. OMB 2003/3341

TD – unauthorised bus services – failing to take effective measures to stop unauthorised free bus services

The complainant's company operated green minibus services. He lodged a complaint with this Office alleging that there were non-franchised buses providing unauthorised free services. He had complained to TD, but no definite reply was given. Moreover, the Department had not taken any effective measures to stop such services.

2. TD explained that upon receipt of the complaint, it had requested the complainant to participate in a discussion to realign those two free bus routes, to achieve a “win-win” situation as free bus services could help boost the economy. After the realignment, a licence was granted to permit the operator concerned to run those two routes for five months.
3. However, the operator continued the services after the period expired and ignored TD’s warning. TD thus initiated an inquiry while the operator sought judicial review. Eventually, the operator proposed an out-of-court settlement.
4. TD said that enforcement action had been taken in accordance with existing regulations. However, the procedures involved took much time and resources. Although TD could prosecute the bus operator, it must first prove that the same driver had driven the same bus within 12 months providing more than 14 days of free bus service, which was difficult to establish. Even if the Department invoked the Road Traffic Ordinance to conduct an inquiry, it would still require evidence from a survey of more than 14 days, which would also be labour-intensive and time-consuming.
5. TD indicated that consideration had been given to streamline the procedures and amend the law so as to control such situation more effectively. Proposals for improvement would be put to a working group under the Transport Advisory Committee.
6. This Office considered that basically TD had handled this complaint according to established procedures. However, the result was not satisfactory. The free bus services had actually been in operation for over two years, but TD had not been able to solve the problem. As such problems might arise elsewhere, TD should expedite action on it. We suggested that the Department seek legal advice again to clarify whether it could in fact institute criminal prosecution against unauthorised bus operators within the existing law. If so, prosecution should be stepped up for deterrence. In addition, we advised the Department to reflect the difficulties encountered to the working group for the formulation of a more appropriate and practical policy.

HOUSING DEPARTMENT ("HD")

HD – refurbishment allowance – poor staff attitude and delay in paying an ex gratia allowance to the complainant for refurbishing her flat

In early July 2004, the complainant accepted HD's offer of a public rental housing unit and chose to receive an ex gratia allowance from HD to refurbish the flat. In late July, the complainant called an officer at the District Tenancy Management Office under HD, requesting to move in earlier. However, the officer refused to provide assistance.

2. The complainant moved in at the end of July. She called the property management agent of the housing estate many times from then to early November regarding payment of the refurbishment allowance, but had no definite answer. In early November, the property management agent finally told her that the HD officer had inadvertently omitted her case, so she would have to wait for another two months.

3. As no grave maladministration was involved in this case, our Office suggested resolving the matter by mediation. Both the complainant and HD agreed.

4. At the mediation meeting, HD's representatives explained that the officer concerned was new to the estate and the delay was unintentional. Furthermore, the property management agent had forgotten to inform HD of the complainant's call, hence prolonging the delay. The Department had reminded staff to be courteous and helpful to estate residents and directed the property management agent to improve its service. The HD representatives also apologised to the complainant.

5. The two parties signed a mediation agreement. The complainant agreed to withdraw her complaint against HD, while the HD representatives immediately handed her the refurbishment allowance.

STUDENT FINANCIAL ASSISTANCE AGENCY ("SFAA")

Case No. OMB 2004/1185

SFAA – application for financial assistance – delay in processing such application under the Local Student Finance Scheme

A full-time student of a local university submitted his application for financial assistance under the Local Student Finance Scheme for 2003/04. He alleged that the SFAA staff who handled his application had been particularly difficult and demanded detailed financial information from all his family members. As a result, his application still had yet to be approved by April 2004. The staff also showed very poor attitude.

2. As the case did not involve serious maladministration, this Office suggested resolving the matter by mediation and both parties agreed.
3. At the mediation meeting, SFAA representatives explained to the complainant the normal policies and procedures for processing an application and the reasons for taking a long time over his application, whilst the complainant took the opportunity to answer some queries raised by SFAA.
4. After a candid exchange of views, the two parties reached an agreement. The complainant agreed to furnish the necessary supporting information as soon as possible. The representatives of SFAA undertook to expedite the process once they received the supplementary information. SFAA also apologised to the complainant and his family members for the poor attitude of the staff.

STUDENT FINANCIAL ASSISTANCE AGENCY ("SFAA")

SFAA – application for financial assistance – approving erroneously the complainant's applications for student financial assistance for her sons and recovering the funds a year later, causing great distress to the complainant and her family

The complainant applied to SFAA in May 2003 for financial assistance for her sons. She was later notified by SFAA that they were eligible for different forms of subsidy, including a 50% remission in school fees. The total amount of assistance was credited into her bank account by autopay in December 2003. The complainant then received a call from SFAA in August 2004 informing her that her applications had been wrongly approved and the financial assistance granted to her sons the year before had to be recovered. SFAA meanwhile sent her a demand note and telephoned her sons' school advising it to recover the school fees.

2. The complainant considered that as an applicant she had completed the application forms honestly. Due to an unfortunate mistake by SFAA, her family suffered distress and their household budget, disruption. The incident resulted in the integrity of her family members being questioned and her sons' dignity tarnished, rendering them unable to face their schoolmates. She, therefore, complained to this Office. She demanded that SFAA issue a letter to admit its mistake in handling the case and punish the staff concerned.

3. As no systemic maladministration was involved in the case, this Office suggested resolving the matter by mediation and secured the consent of both parties.

4. The complainant's husband attended the mediation meeting on behalf of the complainant and recounted the distress caused to their family. He expressed their dissatisfaction that SFAA had not written to explain and apologise. SFAA representatives explained the general procedures in processing applications for student financial assistance and the criteria for approval. They explained the circumstances under which the sons had been wrongly granted fee remission, textbook assistance and the student travel subsidy. They apologised for the distress caused to the complainant and family. SFAA representatives also produced a letter stating the Agency's position for delivery to the complainant. Meanwhile, the complainant's husband commented on the poor arrangements by SFAA in seeking repayment and considered that SFAA should write separately to their sons' school to clarify the matter.

5. After a candid exchange of views, the two parties signed a mediation agreement. SFAA undertook to send a written explanation to the school, with a copy to the complainant. SFAA would also review its procedures for processing applications for financial assistance to prevent recurrence. The complainant agreed to withdraw her case against SFAA, whilst SFAA would consider the complainant's financial condition and accept repayment by instalment of the money wrongly granted to her sons. After the mediation meeting, SFAA took the initiative to propose some repayment arrangements for the complainant's consideration.

BUILDINGS DEPARTMENT ("BD")

BD – removal order – delay in enforcing a removal order issued more than 20 years ago – substantiated

The complainant alleged that as BD had not followed up a removal order issued over 20 years ago against the unauthorised building works ("UBWs") at his premises, he believed that the order had been revoked. When the Department sent him another removal order in late 2003, he had difficulty complying with the requirements.

2. The complainant's premises were a cockloft unit, which originally formed a duplex flat with the ground floor unit. The former owner split the duplex flat into separate cockloft and ground floor units and sold them to the complainant's mother and another buyer. The complainant's mother resold the cockloft unit to him in October 2003. The complainant claimed that the entrance to his unit would be blocked if he reinstated the premises in compliance with the removal order.

3. According to BD, between the issue of the order in 1982 and 1986, the Department had been following up the matter. When it was found that the reinstatement works required cooperation between the owners of both units, however, a new superseding order was issued to the two owners in 1984. However, since the issue of the new order up to July 1986, the Department had not been able to reach the complainant's mother. Because of limited resources, the Department had to focus on more dangerous UBWs and thus did not follow up the case. BD also underwent reorganisation in 1987, 1990 and 1991 and work priorities were rearranged. A task force was set up in 2000 to clear the backlog of removal orders. In January 2002, its staff made another visit to the premises to follow up the case.

4. BD explained that staff had tried to visit the cockloft unit several times but could not gain access. They could only leave a contact slip. In case of questions, the complainant should raise an enquiry. If he was worried that compliance with the order would block the entrance to his unit, he should discuss with the owner of the ground floor unit. As the removal order had been registered with the Land Registry, it would not be revoked due to the passage of time.

Our Observations

5. This Office considered BD too tolerant towards owners not complying with removal orders. It failed to take determined action when the owners did not respond. This case could have been concluded much earlier if BD had taken firm action. The case was further delayed because BD had failed to check the accuracy of the new order when the Department issued it to the owner of the ground floor unit and so had to issue superseding ones.

6. On the other hand, owners had the responsibility to comply with removal orders and to ensure the safety of their buildings. The complainant's mother had all along not responded to BD's removal orders, letters and contact slips. When BD took up the case again, the complainant blamed his own non-compliance on the Department's insufficient supervision. This was not reasonable. The complainant or his mother ought to have liaised with BD earlier to discuss a practicable solution and reinstate the premises.

Conclusion and Recommendations

7. This Office considered that BD had delayed in following up the removal order. The complaint was, therefore, substantiated.

8. The Ombudsman recommended that BD:

- (a) formulate long-term strategies –
 - (i) having regard to the heavy backlog and degree of danger of the UBWs involved, set an annual target for clearing outstanding removal orders that have passed the statutory time limit; and
 - (ii) if the backlog could not be cleared within a short period of time, rationalise those UBWs that pose no imminent danger (by requiring owners to engage authorised persons to submit reports on the safety of their buildings annually and by imposing penalties with annual incremental increase);
- (b) take enforcement action and prosecute uncooperative owners who failed to comply with removal orders; and
- (c) remind staff to check carefully all removal orders to avoid making mistakes and generating unnecessary work such as issuing superseding orders.

9. BD accepted all our recommendations and undertook to review the clearance of backlog annually.

BUILDINGS DEPARTMENT ("BD"), LANDS DEPARTMENT ("Lands D") AND HOUSING DEPARTMENT ("HD")

Case Nos. OMB 2003/3310 - 3312

BD – complaint handling – (a) failing to handle a complaint properly and to give the complainant a written reply – partially substantiated

Lands D – enforcement action – (b) failing to take enforcement action against an unauthorised pai fong on Government land, while accepting its owner's application for a short-term tenancy – unsubstantiated

HD – enforcement action – (c) failing to take enforcement action against the unauthorised pai fong – partially substantiated

After purchasing a house in the New Territories, the complainant found that a pai fong and a boundary wall adjoining her house were built partly on her land and partly on unleased Government land. She, therefore, complained to BD, Lands D and HD, but was not satisfied with the way they handled her case.

Complaint (a)

2. At first, probably because of insufficient details given by the complainant, BD staff went to inspect a different place. Upon receipt of relevant drawings from her, BD arranged another inspection.

3. The complainant doubted the accuracy of BD's inspection because it involved only a visual inspection of the structures and taking of some photographs. She e-mailed BD several times to enquire about the inspection result, asking also for clarification on who should be responsible for assessing the safety of the structures and for compensation in case of injury, death or damage resulting from collapse of the structures. Nevertheless, BD only replied by telephone that the structures posed "no imminent danger", without addressing the question of compensation.

4. BD explained that visual inspection was its normal practice for assessing the safety of structures. Its staff had told the complainant the result immediately after their site inspection. BD had also informed her via Government's Integrated Call Centre that the structures posed no imminent structural danger. As the method of inspection involved professional judgement, it was outside our jurisdiction.

5. However, this Office considered that there were inadequacies in BD's reply. As the Department had not given the complainant a clear and substantive written reply, she had to make a number of enquiries by e-mail. We understood that the question of compensation involved complicated legal issues. However, BD, rather than being so evasive, should have followed its internal guidelines and replied in writing, stating clearly to the complainant that the issue was outside its jurisdiction and that she should seek legal advice.

6. Complaint (a) was, therefore, partially substantiated.

Complaint (b)

7. The complainant had sent e-mails to the relevant District Lands Office ("DLO") under Lands D to enquire whether the structures were legal and safe. DLO replied that it had never issued any licence for the structures and that her enquiries had been referred to HD's Squatter Control Office ("SCO") to verify whether the number marked on the boundary wall was a squatter control survey number.

8. The owner of the structures ("the owner") subsequently applied to DLO for a short-term tenancy ("STT") for the Government land occupied by the structures. The complainant alleged that DLO had favoured the owner in accepting the application.
9. This Office deemed it acceptable that DLO awaited SCO's confirmation of whether the structures were covered by squatter control survey before considering any further action, otherwise the two departments might act inconsistently.
10. The root of the problem lay in the intrusion of the structures into the complainant's land, which could be resolved only by settlement between the complainant and the owner. However, DLO was responsible only for dealing with the occupation of Government land by the structures. This Office agreed that DLO should take decisive and effective action to regulate such occupation by way of STT. This was in line with Lands D policy and not favouring the owner.
11. Complaint (b) was, therefore, unsubstantiated.

Complaint (c)

12. Lands D told the complainant that it had to wait for SCO's verification of squatter control record whilst SCO said it had to wait for Lands D's assessment of the owner's STT application. As a result, the complainant was very dissatisfied.
13. HD found it technically not feasible to demolish that part of the pai fong on Government land as that would affect the remaining part and even the boundary wall on private land. The dispute over the structures on private land should be resolved by settlement between the complainant and the owner. To avoid inconsistency in decision and action between the two departments, SCO needed to wait for Lands D's assessment of the STT application before it could decide on the demolition of that part of the pai fong on Government land.
14. This Office considered it reasonable and responsible of HD to wait for Lands D's decision on the STT and action on the structures before considering any demolition action. Nevertheless, HD took three months just to reply that the structures did not have a squatter control survey number. HD explained that its staff had been occupied by other projects whilst the Department itself was being reorganised. This Office believed that there had been inadequacies in HD's staff deployment and supervision, thus adversely affecting SCO's service.
15. Complaint (c) was, therefore, partially substantiated.

Conclusion and Recommendations

16. Overall, this complaint was partially substantiated.

17. This Office recommended that:
 - (a) BD remind staff to handle enquiries and complaints carefully and to give substantive replies as soon as possible;
 - (b) Lands D consider approving the STT on the premise that this would not affect appropriate legal action against the structures by the departments and parties concerned;
 - (c) HD review its staffing, supervision and staff handover arrangements to ensure that no service would be neglected or delayed; and
 - (d) the complainant resolve the dispute over her private land by legal proceedings.
18. The three departments accepted our recommendations.

FOOD AND ENVIRONMENTAL HYGIENE DEPARTMENT ("FEHD")

FEHD – urn graves – (a) failing to adhere to legal requirements to keep a register of urn spaces for public inspection; (b) failing to notify the complainant of the result of his application after more than ten weeks; (c) losing a copy of the complainant's birth certificate and requiring him to take an oath to affirm his kinship with the deceased; (d) suspected divulgence by its staff of personal data in the complainant's application; and (e) handling his complaint perfunctorily – partially substantiated

The complainant, noting the urn space next to his late father's grave in a cemetery had been vacated, intended to apply for that space for his deceased mother. He went to an office of the Cemeteries and Crematoria Section (the "Office") under FEHD in April and October 2002 for enquiries but was advised verbally that the space was not vacant. As the Office did not keep a register of urn spaces for the cemetery in question, the complainant was unable to check the records himself although he believed the FEHD staff had given him incorrect information. Afterwards, he wrote to ask FEHD about its latest situation. In December 2002, he received a written reply that the space had become vacant and available for application. The complainant followed the Guidance Notes to Application for Used Urn Spaces and completed his application at the Office that month. However, as there was no response by mid-February 2003, he telephoned FEHD and learned that his application was still being processed.

2. In late February 2003, FEHD notified him that his application had been approved and asked him to pay the fees within 14 days. In early March 2003, he went to the Office for the formalities but was told that his file was missing. As he did not bring along his birth certificate that day, the staff asked him to take an oath to affirm his kinship with the deceased. He refused to do so and said he would complain to the management. Next day, he received a call from FEHD that the documents had been found. He was asked to complete the formalities, which he did accordingly.

3. In March 2003, the complainant lodged a complaint with FEHD through the Integrated Call Centre under the Government Secretariat and a newspaper against the staff of the Cemeteries and Crematoria Section for dereliction of duty. In mid-April 2003, he enquired with FEHD by e-mail about the progress of his complaint but had no response. However, the next day, he found FEHD's reply to his complaint in the newspaper. It was not until two weeks later that he received FEHD's written reply. He criticised the Department for disparity in treatment in attaching importance to the media rather than the complainant. Moreover, he held that the Department had failed to give him a satisfactory reply.

4. In late April 2003, when the complainant went to the cemetery to pay respect to his ancestors, a relative living nearby told him that a person of unknown identity had been enquiring whether he had applied for the urn space. The complainant felt surprised and suspected that FEHD staff had divulged his personal information.

Complaint (a)

5. FEHD said there was no legal requirement that a register of graves should be kept in places other than the cemeteries for public inspection. There was, therefore, no impropriety even though the complainant could not check the register of the cemetery in question at the Office.

6. This Office considered that FEHD had already kept a register in that cemetery for public inspection. It was legal and reasonable for the Department not to keep one in the Office as there was no such provision in the Public Cemeteries Regulation. In this light, we considered complaint (a) unsubstantiated.

7. However, in the course of our investigation, we discovered that the Department had not kept a register in all its public cemeteries. FEHD explained that in some remote cemeteries or those where no more burials were accepted, no register was kept for operational reasons and for better use of resources. Nevertheless, the Department had kept those registers in other offices for public inspection in accordance with the relevant legislation. This Office considered that FEHD might have contravened the rules in section 4 of the Public Cemeteries Regulation.

8. As for the allegation that FEHD staff had given him incorrect information when he enquired about the availability of the urn space, FEHD pointed out that there were numerous enquiries each day and it could not possibly take down all of them. Hence, the Department was unable to check why there was an incorrect reply. FEHD suggested that it was neither necessary nor cost-effective to keep a complete written record of all simple verbal enquiries.

9. This Office was of the view that if the complainant's allegation was true, the FEHD staff should be censured. Had there been a written record of the enquiry, it would have helped to identify who should be responsible and also served as concrete evidence.

Complaint (b)

10. FEHD said the delay in processing the complainant's application was due to his missing file. A written apology had been sent to him. The Department had reviewed its despatch procedures. Meanwhile, it would bring up original files to subject officers on schedule to ensure no delay or loss of files.

11. As FEHD had in fact delayed the complainant's application, complaint (b) was substantiated.

Complaint (c)

12. FEHD explained that as the complainant's file could not be located at that time, a separate file was opened to handle his application. Since the copy of his birth certificate submitted was also missing, he was requested to take an oath to affirm his kinship with the deceased. FEHD regarded the action by the staff flexible and practical and would help the complainant. However, the Department was aware of the complainant's dissatisfaction and was willing to issue an apology.

13. This Office noted that FEHD had approved the complainant's application before locating the file and issued a letter requesting him to complete the formalities and to pay the fees in person at the designated office within 14 days. There was no mention in the letter about the missing file or the need for him to take an oath or to bring along his birth certificate. When the complainant went to the Office, however, FEHD staff insisted that he should take an oath or they would not process his application. This Office considered it unreasonable.

14. In view of the above, this Office considered complaint (c) substantiated.

Complaint (d)

15. FEHD stated that the complainant's application had been handled by only one officer and that officer had already resigned. The Department could not comment whether she had divulged information. Furthermore, it had also asked the other staff in that cemetery but they all claimed no knowledge of the application. Our interviews with the staff of that cemetery also could not prove that FEHD staff had unduly divulged the complainant's data.

16. With the lack of independent evidence, this Office considered complaint (d) unsubstantiated.

17. FEHD explained that as the complaint involved its staff, they had to investigate whether disciplinary action was necessary. A full reply could, therefore, be given to the complainant only when the study was completed. There was no disparity in treatment.

18. The Ombudsman considered FEHD's explanation about giving its reply to the newspaper well before the complainant far-fetched and unconvincing. Our investigation also revealed that upon receipt of the complainant's subsequent e-mail enquiry, FEHD did not issue an interim reply according to its guidelines. The Department explained that as the enquiry was related to his earlier complaint, it was not necessary to issue an interim reply within ten days. This Office found that unacceptable because its performance pledge stated clearly that a reply would be issued within ten days. The pledge would not allow any arbitrary discretion by the Department not to reply.

19. This Office further discovered that the Department had not followed its departmental guidelines to issue an interim reply to the complainant when it could not provide a substantive reply within 21 calendar days on the progress of its investigation. Meanwhile, its "substantive" reply to the complainant was too brief, on the excuse that "the documents were missing and could not be located in time" without even mentioning the affirmation incident that the complainant was most unhappy about. That was indeed perfunctory.

20. In view of the above, FEHD did handle the complaint in a perfunctory manner. Complaint (e), therefore, was substantiated.

Conclusion and Recommendations

21. Overall, the complaint was partially substantiated.

22. This Office considered that FEHD should adopt improvement measures to avoid the same mistakes. In this connection, we recommended that FEHD:

- (a) seek legal advice as soon as possible to clarify whether there was any contravention of section 4(1) and (3) of the Public Cemeteries Regulation for failing to provide a register at every public cemetery for public inspection;
- (b) send the complainant a detailed explanation and an apology in writing for causing dissatisfaction and inconvenience in asking him to take an oath to affirm his kinship with the deceased;
- (c) apologise to the complainant for failing to send its reply to him and the newspaper concurrently. It should also instruct staff to reply to complainants and the media simultaneously under similar circumstances;
- (d) instruct staff to strictly follow the administrative circulars and performance pledge to duly issue the replies required; and
- (e) review its existing practice of not keeping any written record of verbal enquiries and replies and formulate practical record-keeping measures for verification.

23. The Ombudsman was pleased to note that FEHD had learned the lesson, rectified its irregularities and accepted our recommendations for implementation.

FOOD AND ENVIRONMENTAL HYGIENE DEPARTMENT ("FEHD")

Case No. OMB 2003/2624

FEHD – handling of offence report – delay in handling a reported littering offence resulting in prosecution being time-barred – substantiated

The complainant alleged that in January 2003 she saw a van driver throw a cigarette butt onto the street. She faxed a "Littering From Vehicle - Report Form" to FEHD on the offence.

2. After examining the facts and noting that the alleged driver had got out of his vehicle when throwing the cigarette butt, a Health Inspector ("Inspector A") classified the offence as "littering in public places" actionable under section 4(1) of the Public Cleansing and Prevention of Nuisances Regulation ("Regulation"), instead of "littering from specified vehicles" under section 9A. He checked with the Transport Department ("TD") and was advised on 10 March 2003 that the vehicle owner was a limited company. He wrote to the Companies Registry on 29 April, seven weeks later, and received the registration details of the company on 27 May.

3. On 13 June 2003, FEHD sent a letter to the company asking for the personal particulars of the driver concerned. The company did not respond. On 30 August, Inspector A wrote to notify the complainant that no prosecution could be instituted as the vehicle owner had refused to disclose the driver's identity. He also stated that the case was time-barred from legal action because six months had elapsed since the alleged offence. The complainant was disappointed that FEHD should have treated the matter so casually.

4. Neither section 4(1) nor section 9A of the Regulation requires the registered owner of a vehicle to inform FEHD of the particulars of the driver of his vehicle. If the owner refused to provide such information, the Department could process the case on its own.

5. FEHD did not have any specific guidelines or circulars for staff in conducting enquiries into reports of offences under sections 4(1) and 9A of the Regulation. The Department kept a prosecution record book for monitoring purposes and FEHD officers were expected to take into account the six-month statutory time bar when processing a case. This case suggested an unfortunate disregard by staff for due diligence.

6. Inspector A stated that he had taken two weeks' vacation leave from 10 March to 28 April 2003 with no one taking up his duties in his absence. Then he had a heavier workload because of the outbreak of Severe Acute Respiratory Syndrome. He did not issue any reminders to the registered owner of the vehicle after FEHD's first letter to the owner on 13 June and before the final reply to the complainant in late August. As a result, idle periods adding up to four months had been wasted. We found this most unacceptable for a case with statutory time bar.

7. The Department had failed to meet its performance pledge at the early stage in sending a belated acknowledgement to the complainant on 25 February 2003. It had also failed to inform her at once when the offence became time-barred from prosecution on 29 July. FEHD's handling of this case had been slipshod and inconceivably casual. This complaint was substantiated.

Recommendations

8. The Ombudsman recommended that FEHD:

- (a) remind staff to comply with its performance pledge;
- (b) brief staff on the interpretation and operation of relevant statutory provisions;
- (c) issue specific guidelines or circulars for investigating reports of offences under sections 4(1) and 9A of the Regulation;
- (d) stipulate specific time-frame for staff when handling such cases;
- (e) deploy suitable staff to take up the duties of colleagues on leave;
- (f) tighten the arrangements for monitoring progress of cases under investigation;
- (g) seek legal advice on actions FEHD may take if the registered owner of a vehicle fails to disclose information required for consideration of action;
- (h) consider, in consultation with the relevant policy bureau, the need for amending the Regulation to make such disclosure mandatory as an aid to investigation;
- (i) consider using separate forms for reporting offences under sections 4(1) and 9A of the Regulation;
- (j) issue a letter of apology to the complainant; and
- (k) review each and every time-barred case to identify the causes for such and to decide on systemic improvement measures.

9. FEHD accepted all of the above recommendations except (h) on the grounds that vehicle owners would generally disclose the identity of the driver so as to relieve their liability. However, this Office considered that there may well be circumstances where a vehicle owner has no liability whatsoever without identifying the driver. As such, the owner would have no incentive to disclose the driver's identity. In this light, a statutory power is necessary for the public authority to require the vehicle owner to supply information for effective investigation of an offence. FEHD should, therefore, reconsider our recommendation (h), and seek relevant legislative amendments to appropriately expand its investigation power. FEHD is seeking legal advice on this.

FOOD AND ENVIRONMENTAL HYGIENE DEPARTMENT ("FEHD")

FEHD – exhumation of remains – impropriety in handling an application for exhumation of remains, resulting in the remains of the complainant's mother being exhumed and cremated by a stranger several years ago and subsequently lost – substantiated

The complainant's mother had passed away in 1964 and her remains were buried in an urn grave cemetery in 1971. The cemetery was at that time under the management of the then Regional Services Department ("RSD") but FEHD took over in January 2000. As part of the grave was damaged, the complainant had it repaired in 1993. She did not know that the remains in the grave had been exhumed.

2. In April 2003, the complainant's father applied to FEHD for exhumation of his late wife's remains for cremation and safekeeping in a columbarium. FEHD then discovered that in 1985, exhumation of the remains had been granted to a Mr A for cremation and the ashes taken away. The Department tried to contact Mr A but to no avail. The whereabouts of the ashes were unknown. In July 2003, FEHD dismantled the grave, without notifying the complainant and her family, to re-sell the space. Greatly dissatisfied, the complainant lodged a complaint with this Office.

3. The complainant further claimed to have spent some $5,000 to restore the grave in 1993 and then some $32,000 for a private niche for the reinterment of her mother's ashes before the incident came to light. She hoped that FEHD would compensate for the loss.

Exhumation Procedures

4. The 1985 Operation Manual of the former RSD required application for removal or exhumation of human remains to be made at its Cemeteries and Crematoria Section ("C & C Section") by completing an application form and enclosing documents to prove the kinship with the deceased. Upon verification and payment of the fees, a permit would be issued to the applicant. In the absence of documentary proof, the applicant should provide a sworn declaration instead. FEHD believed Mr A to have followed the proper procedures and been granted a permit in 1985.

5. Nevertheless, FEHD was unable to confirm whether Mr A had applied as next of kin or on a sworn declaration as a person of proper interest. As such, this Office could not ascertain whether there was any kinship between Mr A and the complainant's deceased mother.

Verification of Applicant's Identify

6. In March 2003, on learning that the remains of the complainant's mother had been exhumed by a stranger, FEHD immediately tried to contact Mr A. A letter, issued to the address provided by Mr A, was returned. On checking with the Land Registry, FEHD learned that the property in question had been sold in 1986. The Department further enquired with the undertaker that carried out the exhumation for Mr A. However, it was so long ago that the records were already destroyed.

Handling of Records

7. FEHD indicated that its C & C Section kept only records of exhumation applications since 1988. Those before that were "nowhere to be found". As we could not check the records on the case, we could not verify FEHD's assumption, i.e. that Mr A ought to have made his application in accordance with the procedures.

8. Set up in January 2000, FEHD took over the functions of the former RSD and Urban Services Department, including the management of cemeteries. It was impossible for FEHD to find out from its records the identity of the RSD staff who had handled the application.

9. This Office noticed that FEHD had taken over all of the former RSD files and records on the cemeteries and crematoria in the New Territories. According to FEHD, it had never destroyed any of them. Nevertheless, FEHD was unable to locate such past records before 1988. This Office noted that the Department had failed to follow departmental guidelines to formulate procedures and timetables for the disposal of inactive records on cemeteries and burials. Inadequacy in its maintenance of files and records was evident.

FEHD's Computer Records

10. This Office noted that much of the data in the Department's computer system was input after the late 1980's and many records did not include the particulars of the applicants who applied to bury the remains. In the absence of full information, this Office could not possibly ascertain whether Mr A had buried someone of the same name in the said urn grave cemetery before 1985. As the computer records contained only the data of those applicants who applied for burials, they would not have Mr A's particulars if he was not the original applicant for the burial.

Arrangements on Removing Grave

11. In March 2003, FEHD received the complaint. Inspection confirmed that the grave was empty and the remains had been exhumed. In early July 2003, the Department dismantled the grave to re-sell the space without notifying the complainant and her family.

12. In general, urn spaces were for permanent burial. However, when the remains were exhumed, the spaces would be recovered and arranged for resale. The Department stressed that since the grave space had been "returned" to the former RSD in 1985, it was listed as "an empty grave" and became available for reallocation. Its staff only followed the normal practice to dismantle the grave after confirming that it was “empty” in July 2003.

13. This Office, however, considered there to be impropriety on the part of FEHD because the staff had failed to follow the Public Cemeteries Regulation and notify in writing the “next of kin” of the deceased, i.e. the complainant and her family, before dismantling the grave.

Conclusion and Recommendations

14. As the former RSD had delayed in resuming the grave space in question, the complainant and her family could not realise earlier that the remains had been exhumed and so missed the opportunity to trace the whereabouts of the ashes. Furthermore, FEHD’s computer records were incomplete and management of the files and records was unsatisfactory. FEHD had also not had regard for the complainant’s feelings when it resumed the grave space. The Ombudsman, therefore, considered the complaint substantiated.

15. The Ombudsman recommended that FEHD:

- (a) issue a written apology to the complainant for failing to notify her and her family before dismantling the grave;
- (b) draw up a timetable for destroying the C & C Section’s inactive files and records and ensure that other old files and inactive records were duly and regularly disposed of or destroyed; and
- (c) instruct frontline staff to ensure that the burial information input into the computer database was complete and accurate.

16. Generally, The Ombudsman would not intervene in compensation claims as they were not administrative matters and leave legal liability to be resolved in court. However, in this case, the complainant had sought legal advice and tried in vain to claim compensation through the legal channel. She had also indicated that she would not lodge her claim through civil proceedings. As it was due to the impropriety of the Department that the complainant and her family had to suffer from the financial loss, The Ombudsman suggested that FEHD make an appropriate compensation to the complainant.

17. FEHD had accepted and implemented our recommendations.

HIGHWAYS DEPARTMENT ("Hy D"), ENVIRONMENTAL PROTECTION DEPARTMENT ("EPD") AND ENVIRONMENT, TRANSPORT AND WORKS BUREAU ("ETWB")

Case Nos. OMB 2003/0313 - 0314; OMB 2003/0994

Hy D, EPD and ETWB – noise barriers – maladministration in installing and removing noise barriers at Tolo Highway – partially substantiated

The complainant alleged that there had been maladministration by Hy D, EPD and ETWB in installing and then removing the noise barriers along Tolo Highway. He considered it a waste of public money to remove the noise barriers when an Environmental Impact Assessment ("EIA") study had already confirmed the need for them. He also considered that as the barriers were too colourful, they could be a hazard to road safety.

Installation and Removal Processes

2. To cope with the increasing traffic, Hy D had proposed widening one section of the Tolo Highway from dual three lanes to dual four lanes. In April 1997, Hy D's consultants completed an EIA study, which confirmed that certain existing and planned developments would thus be affected by noise exceeding the statutory limit. They, therefore, proposed the installation of noise barriers. The planned developments were mainly in the Pak Shek Kok ("PSK") reclamation area and Tai Po Area 39 ("Area 39"). In November 1998, EPD issued an Environmental Permit ("Permit") for the Tolo Highway Widening Project ("the Project"), requiring installation of the noise barriers.

3. In March 1999, Hy D awarded the project contract. As there was no firm schedule for the Area 39 developments, Hy D specified only the foundation work of the noise barriers in the contract while the installation of the upper parts of the noise barriers was included as a "provisional item" only. In September 1999, as there would be no firm development programme for Area 39 before 2004, Hy D confirmed that the "provisional items" would not be carried out.

4. In June 2000, the Town Planning Board proposed to cancel the installation of noise barriers for the PSK developments due to a change in their schedule. In August 2000, an inter-departmental meeting agreed to defer the installation of the noise barriers for Area 39. The Lands Department also agreed to require the developers, as a land sales condition, to take noise mitigation measures in the PSK reclamation area. Hy D cancelled the installation of the noise barriers for PSK after obtaining EPD's approval to vary the Permit conditions. In August 2000, Hy D also sought a variation of the conditions so as to defer the noise barriers works for Area 39.

5. In January 2001, however, EPD told Hy D that a new EIA study and public consultation would be required for the proposed deferment. Hy D estimated that the whole process would take eight months. If the application was rejected after the EIA process, the noise barriers works would fall behind the schedule stated in the Project contract. There would then be claims from the contractors. Hy D, therefore, decided in March 2001 to install the noise barriers for Area 39.

6. However, some people expressed concern that the noise barriers obstructed road users' view of the harbour and that the need for the barriers was not great because there were only a limited number of residential buildings in the vicinity of some sections of the Highway. In November 2002, ETWB briefed the Panel on Transport of the Legislative Council on the Project and the installation of the noise barriers. The Bureau undertook to review the provision of noise barriers. In January 2003, new guidelines on their provision were formulated and explained to the Panel as well as that on Environmental Affairs.

7. In April 2003, Hy D applied to EPD for a variation of the Permit conditions so as to remove or modify the noise barriers. EPD approved the application in May on condition that the noise barriers be reinstated before the completion of the developments in Area 39 and The Chinese University of Hong Kong. The removal and modification of the noise barriers were generally completed in May 2003.

Observations and Opinions

8. We considered that Hy D could have completed the necessary EIA procedures in time for deferring the installation of the noise barriers and thus avoided their removal and modification, if it had applied for a variation of the Permit conditions in September 1999 when the decision to defer the works was made, instead of in August 2000. The complaint against Hy D was, therefore, partially substantiated.

9. We noted that EPD insisted in January 2001 that Hy D go through the whole EIA procedure if it wished to defer the installation of the noise barriers. However, in April 2003, EPD merely asked for supplementary EIA information without insisting on repeating the whole EIA procedure when Hy D applied for a variation of the conditions. Such inconsistency reflected that EPD had been bureaucratic or over-cautious previously, but was far more accommodating later. If EPD had been more flexible in 2001 towards Hy D's application for deferring the installation of noise barriers, the subsequent removal and modification could have been avoided. The complaint against EPD was, therefore, partially substantiated.

10. As for ETWB, although it had consulted the Panels on Environmental Affairs and on Transport of the Legislative Council and some District Councillors on the removal of the noise barriers, it had not conducted more extensive consultation on the impact of the removal, particularly the inconvenience caused to road users by prolonging the temporary traffic arrangements. We also doubted the magnitude of the "public" concern about the blocking of the harbour view. Furthermore, the new guidelines on the provision of noise barriers should apply to new projects and not retrospectively to current works. Removal of noise barriers already built constituted a waste of public resources. The complaint against ETWB was, therefore, partially substantiated.

Conclusion

11. Overall, the complaint was partially substantiated. The choice of colours for the noise barriers was a professional matter and, therefore, outside our jurisdiction.

Recommendations

12. This Office recommended that ETWB:

- (a) review its policy making procedures and develop ways to balance different views;
- (b) direct those departments responsible for road projects to coordinate with departments such as EPD for varying the Permit conditions as early as possible if changes to the land use of the areas affected by the noise were expected; and
- (c) remind all works departments to allow in works contracts sufficient time for public consultation on adjustments to noise mitigation measures.

13. Hy D fully accepted our findings and recommendations.

14. Although EPD and ETWB did not accept that they should be partly responsible for the matter, The Ombudsman, after considering all the relevant factors, maintained her conclusion and recommendations.

HOME AFFAIRS DEPARTMENT ("HAD")

Case Nos. OMB 2004/0713; OMB 2004/1365

HAD – mailing arrangements – sending each of two complainants five identical letters, thus wasting public resources – substantiated

A District Office ("DO") under HAD consulted local residents on a certain issue. Afterwards, the DO informed the complainants, Mr A and Mr B, of the outcome of the issue by sending them each five identical letters. The complainants considered the DO's arrangements perfunctory and wasteful.

2. In this case, the DO had sent out consultation letters to residents of a building including the complainants. Subsequently, it sent letters to those respondents who had raised an objection, to inform them of the outcome of the issue. As four respondents had supplied Mr A's address as their residential addresses and there was a clerical error by DO staff, Mr A received five such letters. As for Mr B, five respondents had supplied his address as their residential addresses, so he too received five such letters. Moreover, all such letters did not have the addressees' names.

3. We appreciated DO's concern over the need to maintain privacy and to inform each respondent and, therefore, did not consider such individual mailing wasteful. However, the names of the addressees should have been clearly and correctly written on the envelopes.
4. This complaint was, therefore, substantiated.
5. HAD agreed to improve its practice accordingly. It also accepted our recommendations to send written apologies to the complainants and to issue clear guidelines to all DOs to avoid occurrence of similar incidents.

LEISURE AND CULTURAL SERVICES DEPARTMENT ("LCSD"),

HAD – street management – failing to resolve the problem of laundry drying in public places, thus marring the cityscape – unsubstantiated

Lands D, FEHD, LCSD, Hy D and TD – street management – failing to resolve the problem of laundry drying in public places, thus marring the cityscape – substantiated

The complainant walked past a pleasant tree-lined pedestrian link everyday. Regrettably, the beautiful environment was marred by laundry hung on the trees and railings of public staircases. Complaints were lodged with the Housing Department ("HD"), Hy D and FEHD. However, they all said that the problem was "outside their jurisdiction". HAD indicated that the issue had to be tackled jointly by several Government departments. Consequently, a complaint was lodged with this Office.

2. Our investigation covered six Government departments: HAD, FEHD, Lands D, LCSD, Hy D and TD.
3. Lands D, HAD, FEHD, Hy D, TD, the Buildings Department ("BD") and the Police held an inter-departmental meeting in mid-November 2003 to discuss the "grey areas" in street management. Removal of laundry in public places was on the agenda. Representatives reaffirmed that their respective departments were not authorised to deal with this problem. They finally agreed that, pending Hy D obtaining legal advice, they should refer repeated complaints within a particular district to the relevant District Office ("DO") for it to advise the residents against such practice.

Supplementary Information from Departments

4. The local DO wrote to the management offices and owners' corporations of the public housing estate concerned and private residential developments nearby, asking them to deal with the problem. It further convened an inter-departmental meeting in mid-May 2004 ("May meeting"), which was attended by representatives from Lands D, FEHD, LCSD, Hy D and TD (the "five Departments"). DO suggested that warning signs be posted at laundry drying black spots in the district to warn residents before the five Departments took action to remove laundry. Besides drawing up a list of black spots in the district, the DO also designed warning signs for departments to post at black spots within their jurisdiction. HAD considered it more effective for a single department to take action, but none had the proper authority to tackle the problem under existing legislation.

5. Lands D indicated that under the Land (Miscellaneous Provisions) Ordinance, it could remove only structures on unleased Government land. Moreover, offenders must be given at least one day's prior notice. To invoke the legislation and take enforcement action against laundry hung for only a few hours would not be practical. The Department believed that it should adhere to the decision at the May meeting, i.e. to take inter-departmental action against the problem.

6. FEHD explained that laundry hung by the local residents were not rubbish. As they would not cause inconvenience to street-sweepers or obstruct passageways, there was no basis for the Department to invoke the Public Health and Municipal Services Ordinance or the Summary Offences Ordinance and take enforcement action. On the other hand, according to the decision at the May meeting, laundry could be put on the ground by staff of departments concerned and then be treated as rubbish by FEHD staff if their owners did not take them back. FEHD considered that the Government should educate the public, and designated drying areas for laundry be set up within housing estates.

7. LCSD claimed that it was only responsible for the maintenance of plants in the area in question but not authorised to remove laundry hung there. The Department had, following the decisions at the May meeting, put up warning signs there to urge residents not to dry their laundry in public places. The situation had now improved. LCSD indicated that before starting maintenance works on plants, its staff would remove laundry hung on the trees and put them on the ground just next to the trees.

8. Hy D considered that under the Road Traffic (Traffic Control) Regulations, its staff could only take action to remove obstacles when they cause obstructions to road/maintenance works, or when they pose a threat to pedestrians or vehicles. It further pointed out that drying of laundry in public places was a district problem in which facilities under several departments were involved. The issue was thus best dealt with through inter-departmental efforts coordinated by the local DO, lest individual departments had to face alone residents upset by such enforcement action.

9. TD indicated that drying of laundry in public places had nothing to do with transport management and control. The problem, therefore, did not fall within their jurisdiction. Besides, the site in question was some distance from roads and pedestrian crossings. To dry laundry there should not affect the traffic, nor pose a danger to vehicles or pedestrians. TD would normally refer such complaints to the department responsible for the district concerned. Complaints received from other departments would be assessed from a traffic control perspective to determine whether the safety of road-users had been compromised.

Observations and Opinions

10. DO had written to various parties concerned, convened the May meeting, drawn up a list of black spots and even designed warning signs for other departments to use. It had performed appropriately as a district coordinator and was proactive in coordinating inter-departmental efforts to find solutions to the problem.

11. Lands D had the duty to keep unleased Government land free from illegal occupation. To dry laundry in public places is to occupy Government land for private use and so the Department should take action. Lands D did not do so because of a certain technicality, i.e. at least one day's notice should be given. It had actually dodged its responsibility in solving the problem.

12. Laundry hung in public places marred the cityscape and scenery. FEHD also did not focus sufficiently on the problem. As the Department is already authorised to remove publicity materials, by extension, it should be empowered to remove laundry hung in public places. If necessary, it could consider amending the Public Health and Municipal Services Ordinance.

13. Drying of laundry on trees was not a new issue, but LCSD sidestepped the problem and did not attempt to find a solution.

14. One of the spots of drying of laundry in question was railings of staircases on slopes. It meant that pedestrians could not use the railings as handrails because of the laundry, thus affecting their safety. Hy D did not take enforcement action to remove the laundry.

15. Laundry hung along the pavement would cause obstructions or even danger to vehicles if they ever got blown onto the roads. The problem therefore had a bearing on transport management and control. However, TD, just like other departments, was only concerned with its own perspective, and did not focus on finding a solution from a wider perspective of the Government as a whole.

Conclusion

16. This Office considered that the local DO under HAD had played a proactive role in coordinating inter-departmental efforts to find solutions to the problem. The complaint against HAD, therefore, was unsubstantiated.

17. The five Departments claimed that they had no authority to take action on their own. If so, whence did their authority for joint enforcement action come? This Office was of the view that, actually, none of them was willing to assume the sole responsibility or a leading role in solving the problem. They had procrastinated and failed to take action. Therefore, the complaint against the five Departments was substantiated.

Final Remarks

18. The five Departments were overly concerned that their individual enforcement actions might lead to confrontation with residents and would like DO to take up the responsibility of coordinating joint action. However, inter-departmental action required time for planning and coordination and could only be a stopgap measure, not a long-term solution to the problem. The five Departments should get legal advice with a view to seeking empowerment for them to act within their own jurisdiction against laundry hung in public places. An agreement should be reached within the Administration for a single department to take up a leading role in enforcement action to remove laundry as a matter of routine. This might involve legislative amendment, if needed.

19. This case illustrated clearly the inability or indecision on the part of the departments concerned to resolve the problem. To remedy the lack of effective central coordination, The Ombudsman had requested the Chief Secretary for Administration ("CS") to intervene and to consider authorising a particular department to assume the "lead" responsibility to deal with the problem; the necessity of amending existing legislation to ensure that departments have the necessary legal authority for enforcement actions; as well as to study with HD, HAD and BD the feasibility of designating areas for laundry drying within public housing estates, Home Ownership Scheme estates and private residential developments.

20. In response, CS had directed HAD to conduct a comprehensive review to come up with a solution to the problem.

HOUSING DEPARTMENT ("HD")

Case No. OMB 2003/1765

HD – occupation of common area – allowing its Tenancy Management Office to occupy part of the common areas of a Tenants Purchase Scheme estate – partially substantiated

The Owners' Corporation ("OC") of a Tenants Purchase Scheme ("TPS") estate alleged that HD had occupied part of the common areas of the estate for three years without the owners' consent. The Department had used the site as its Property Management Services Office ("PMSO") for management of the estate and also as its Tenancy Management Office ("TMO") for leasing and sale of the housing units that it owned as developer. The OC considered HD's occupation of the common areas for its TMO to infringe upon the owners' common ownership and demanded HD to explain and compensate the OC at market rate.

2. HD admitted occupation of the site but refused to compensate the OC at market rate. It pointed out that since the site could not be used for commercial purposes, the OC had not suffered any loss of rent as a result of its occupation. It had used the site temporarily because it had no other choice and the TMO was meant to serve both public housing tenants and prospective owners. HD had not gained any actual benefits. Unless the OC could prove its loss, the Department would not consider compensating the OC.

3. This Office noted that under the Deed of Mutual Covenant ("DMC"), HD as Manager of the estate could authorise Government or any person(s) to occupy any part of the common areas. As such, it was not entirely without legal justification for HD to set up its TMO at the site. However, in so doing, the Department might have restricted or hindered the owners' common ownership and use of the common areas.

4. The DMC also provided that OC approval was required for the Manager to use the common areas. At the initial stage, the OC had not yet been formed and HD was unable to find an appropriate alternative site for the TMO. As HD was aware that it might have contravened the DMC, it had considered relocating the TMO to its shopping arcade in the estate. However, the relocation plan was subsequently shelved as the Department planned to set up a regional office elsewhere to replace the TMOs in different estates.

5. Our investigation revealed that HD had not made proper forward planning. As a result, it had no choice but to occupy part of the common areas of the estate. Subsequently, it had also failed to relocate the TMO earlier. Moreover, after the OC was formed, the Department had failed to discuss promptly with the OC its continued occupation of the site. It had thus missed the chance to remedy the situation.

6. Nonetheless, the operation of the TMO was open knowledge. Being aware of its existence, the OC should not have allowed the occupation to persist for three years. The OC was, therefore, partly responsible.

7. Overall, this complaint was partially substantiated.

8. This Office recommended that HD issue an apology to the OC for having occupied the common area and make proper accommodation arrangements in future. HD accepted and implemented our recommendations.

9. We also suggested that the OC and HD seek legal advice and consider resolving their dispute through mediation.

HOUSING DEPARTMENT ("HD")

Case No. OMB 2004/0788

HD – handling of application – delay in handling the complainant's application for a Green Form Certificate and failure to forewarn her so that she could not apply for a Home Assistance Loan in time – partially substantiated

The complainant had applied for public housing and was wait-listed. On 16 July 2003, she submitted an application to HD for a Green Form Certificate ("GFC"), with which she could apply for a Home Assistance Loan ("loan"). According to her, HD staff had told her that a GFC could be issued in a month or so and that the Department would stop allocating public housing to her upon receipt of her GFC application.

2. However, about a week after submitting her GFC application, she was allocated a public housing unit. Two days later, she called the HD office concerned to reject the allocation.

3. In early November, she received her GFC and a supplementary note that the number of loan applications had already exceeded the quota. Applications submitted in or after October would, therefore, be wait-listed. HD staff also told her that should her loan application fail, her GFC would become invalid and no GFC would be reissued. She, therefore, decided to wait and did not apply for a loan. On 26 November 2003, the Hong Kong Housing Authority ("HA") decided to stop accepting new loan applications immediately. The complainant felt aggrieved at losing the chance of securing a loan due to HD's delay in processing her GFC application and failure to forewarn her about over-application for loans or the impending discontinuation of the Loan Scheme.

4. HD explained that it normally would not accept rejection by telephone of public housing allocation. Moreover, it did not have any record of the complainant having called to reject the allocation. Recording of conversations also showed that HD staff had told the complainant that the GFC would be issued in two to three months rather than a month or so. On the other hand, HD's Lettings Unit had actually received the complainant's GFC application on 23 July, but failed to file it in time to stop the public housing allocation. As a result, more than two months had been taken to process the allocation and its rejection, before the GFC was finally issued on 29 October. The whole process had taken more than three months, slightly exceeding the verbal pledge made by HD staff.

5. An HD letter indicating over-application for loans was in fact attached to the GFC to notify applicants. Since such over-application had never occurred before, the HD staff concerned might not know the exact arrangements, in particular the fact that the applicant could seek to extend the GFC validity. There were also no details of such arrangements on the GFC for applicants' information. Otherwise, the complainant could have applied for loan without having to worry about possible invalidation of the GFC.

6. As regards the discontinuation of the Loan Scheme, that was a decision of HA on 26 November. HD could not have notified the complainant in advance.

Conclusion and Recommendations

7. Overall, this complaint was partially substantiated.
8. The Ombudsman recommended that HD:
 - (a) apologise to the complainant for the delay;
 - (b) streamline the procedures for processing GFC applications to obviate the need for first completing formalities relating to applicants' rejection of public housing allocation;
 - (c) review the procedures of the Lettings Unit to ensure expeditious handling of documents;
 - (d) pick out for priority processing those cases of rejection of public housing allocation where the allocatees have applied for GFCs; and
 - (e) explain clearly in the GFC the arrangements for extending its validity.
9. HD accepted recommendations (a), (b), (c) and (e), but considered that (d) might delay the processing of other rejection cases. As the number of priority cases under (d) was expected to be small and so too the problem envisaged by HD, The Ombudsman decided to keep (d).

HOUSING DEPARTMENT ("HD")

HD – tendering of shops – (a) delay in calling for tenders again for certain shop spaces when the successful tenderers did not execute the leases; and (b) lack of response to the complainant's enquiry – partially substantiated

The complainant tendered for lease of Shops A and B in a housing estate under HD in September 2002 and September 2003 respectively, but in vain. When the successful tenderers failed to execute the leases, HD did not call for tenders again until after more than six months. In May 2004, the complainant again failed in tendering for Shop C. As the shop was not opened after two months, he made enquiries with a Senior Housing Manager ("SHM") of HD, but did not get any reply.

Information provided by HD

2. Under HD's tender system, when a successful tenderer failed to execute the lease, the Department would not consider the other bids in the same tender exercise. Instead, it would call for tenders again later. The process would take about three months.
3. Shop A remained unleased after two tender exercises in September 2002 and January 2003, because of dishonoured cheques from the successful tenderers. The shop was finally leased out by open tender in March 2003.

4. The successful tenderer for Shop B, despite repeated reminders, failed to show up time and again between October and December 2003 for signing the lease. He further requested deferring the lease signing on various excuses. HD eventually had his tender deposit forfeited in late February 2004 and called for tenders again for the shop for a different trade in July 2004. However, the tender exercise was cancelled upon objection from a tenant.
5. As for Shop C, the successful tenderer was found to have breached lease conditions previously and was, therefore, disqualified. Tenders were invited again in late August 2004. The new shop was finally opened in October.
6. The SHM concerned had been transferred to another post shortly after the complainant's enquiry in July 2004, but he had briefed his successor Mr D about the enquiry. Mr D telephoned the complainant in early August 2004 and replied to his two written enquiries.

Observations

Complaint (a)

7. With regard to the problem of dishonoured cheques, this Office considered that HD should ask for tender deposits in the form of cashier's order or cash to eliminate this risk.
8. HD had not strictly enforced the provisions in the General Conditions of Tender ("the Conditions") and had allowed the successful tenderer for Shop B to delay signing the lease. It did not have his tender deposit forfeited until three months later.
9. Its cancellation of the new tender exercise in the face of objection from a tenant showed a lack of careful planning. As a result, the shop was left vacant for a prolonged period.
10. When the successful tenderer for Shop C was disqualified, HD should have awarded the tenderer to the next highest tenderer instead of calling for tenders again.
11. In view of the above, complaint (a) was substantiated.

Complaint (b)

12. The former SHM had briefed Mr D and the latter had responded to the complainant's enquiries verbally and in writing. Complaint (b) was, therefore, unsubstantiated.

Conclusion and Recommendations

13. Overall, this complaint was partially substantiated.
14. This Office recommended that HD:
 - (a) issue guidelines to staff for strict enforcement of the Conditions regarding forfeiture of tender deposits so as to deter deliberate delays in lease signing;

- (b) accept only cashier's orders or cash for payment of tender deposits;
- (c) examine the possibility of revising the Conditions to raise the percentage of the tender deposits that could be forfeited and hence, the cost to those who wilfully obstruct the letting of shops;
- (d) consider awarding the tender to the next highest tenderer when the successful tenderer is disqualified or fails to take up the lease; and
- (e) review the current procedures and revise the work flow to shorten the time for inviting tenders.

15. HD had reservations over recommendation (b), indicating that in normal tender exercises, to enclose cash with the tender document might give rise to disputes and security problems; to ask for cashier's orders would affect the cash flow of tenderers as the process would take time. Nevertheless, the Department would study the feasibility of accepting cashier's orders in instant tender exercises. This Office had no objection.

HOUSING DEPARTMENT ("HD") AND REGISTRATION AND ELECTORAL OFFICE ("REO")

HD – personal data – (a) mishandling the complainant's personal data and providing inaccurate information to REO, rendering her unable to vote in the constituency of her residence in the District Council election – substantiated

REO – electoral records – (b) changing the complainant's constituency in the District Council election without prior notice; and (c) sending an address update notice to the wrong address provided by HD, such that the complainant did not realise her personal data had been changed – substantiated other than alleged

The complainant previously lived with her family in public housing in Kowloon. On marriage in 1999, she moved to the New Territories while her family moved to a Home Ownership Scheme ("HOS") flat in Kowloon. After informing HD to delete her name from the public housing tenants records, she also notified REO to update her residential address. In the 1999/2000 Legislative Council election, she voted in her geographical constituency in the New Territories. However, for the 2003 District Council election, REO changed her electoral address to her family's address at the HOS flat and assigned her to vote in a constituency in Kowloon.

Complaint (a)

2. At REO's request, HD provided to REO changes of particulars of public housing tenants and HOS occupants aged 18 and above each month. After deleting the complainant's name from the public housing tenants records, HD staff failed to follow the established procedures of passing the photocopies of updated documents to the Home Ownership Centre for action. The Home Ownership Centre, therefore, could not update its records and sent the wrong information to REO, which then assumed the complainant had moved to the HOS flat and so changed her electoral address.

3. HD stressed that the staff concerned was just negligent and did not mean to misinform REO. On learning about the incident, HD deleted the complainant's name from the HOS records, reviewed the relevant procedures and adopted improvement measures.

4. This Office considered HD procedures for deleting the complainant's name from the public housing tenants records inadequate. It also failed to keep a clear record of the changes of particulars of tenants provided to REO each month and so could not check the records.

5. The Ombudsman, therefore, considered complaint (a) substantiated.

Complaints (b) and (c)

6. Upon receipt of the data from HD, REO would check against the electoral records. If an electoral address differed from that provided by HD and no notice of change of address had been received from the elector, REO would assume the address from HD to be the latest. Nevertheless, REO would send two updating of address notices respectively to the existing electoral address and the new address provided by HD before updating its records to ensure that the particulars were accurate and to remind the elector to advise REO of any change of residential address.

7. When the complainant informed REO of her change of address in 2000, REO immediately updated her electoral records. However, REO received HD's information in 2001 indicating that she had moved. REO then sent notices by surface mail to the complainant's addresses at HOS and in New Territories, stating that her electoral address had been changed to the HOS address and she could advise REO of any correction within one month. On receiving no response, REO assumed that the address provided by HD was correct.

8. Meanwhile, the complainant claimed that she had never received any updating of address notice from REO. She considered it improper for REO to change her constituency. On receiving the complaint, REO changed her electoral address back to her address in the New Territories in 2004.

9. As updating of address notices were not sent by registered mail and REO did not keep such records, we could not verify whether REO had really sent out notices. Even if REO had done so to both the new and old addresses, it was questionable whether REO should assume that the complainant actually received them, understood the contents and did not want to respond. We considered that REO should take the initiative to contact the complainant by telephone or other means (such as by fax) before updating her electoral address.

10. In this light, The Ombudsman considered complaints (b) and (c) unsubstantiated. However, there was maladministration other than that alleged on the part of REO as it had failed to take the initiative to verify the complainant's address.

Conclusion and Recommendations

11. Overall, this case was partially substantiated.
12. To prevent recurrence of similar incidents, The Ombudsman recommended that:

HD

- (a) send a written apology to the complainant;
- (b) review the existing procedures and implement improvement measures as soon as possible, and consider revising departmental instructions to remind frontline staff to check whether tenants have their names in the HOS records when deleting them from the public housing tenants records, and to inform the Home Ownership Centre promptly within a specified period for follow-up action; and
- (c) consider making electronic copies for easy checking when providing changes of particulars of tenants to REO.

REO

- (d) review the existing procedures for updating the electoral records and consider revising the content of the updating of address notice. After sending out the notice, unless there was a written confirmation from the elector, REO should not change any elector's personal data (including the electoral address);
- (e) study the scope of relevant legislation and consider approaching more public organisations for personal data of electors (especially those living in private buildings) for verification of electoral records. This should avoid any misunderstanding that public housing tenants and HOS occupants were given different treatment; and
- (f) enhance publicity programmes, promote the civic awareness of voting in elections, stress that it is the responsibility of electors to update their personal data to ensure accuracy of information in the electoral register, and remind electors that it is an offence to vote in a constituency not corresponding to one's residential address.

13. HD accepted all our recommendations and issued a written apology to the complainant. Meanwhile, it had issued new departmental instructions on the proper procedures for handling deletion of names from the public housing tenants records. HD would also make and keep electronic copies for five years when providing changes of particulars of tenants to REO.

14. REO accepted all our recommendations and revised the content of the updating of address notice. It also undertook to step up publicity at some appropriate time on the importance of updating personal data and to study the possibility of approaching more public organisations for personal data of electors.

LANDS DEPARTMENT (“Lands D”)

Case No. OMB 2004/1938

Lands D – handling of application – delay and impropriety in handling the complainant’s application for building two New Territories Exempted Houses – substantiated

The complainant was the owner of two lots A and B. In November 1996, he applied to the local District Lands Office (“DLO”) under Lands D for approval to build two New Territories Exempted Houses (“NTEHs”). Besides providing DLO with further information, he had inspected the lots with DLO staff and engaged a professional surveyor to set out their boundaries. Despite these efforts and numerous verbal and written reminders, DLO still could not reach a decision by May 2004. The complainant was dissatisfied with the delay.

2. The Land Registry did not have any record that Lot A had a “house” status. The complainant provided documents in December 1997, indicating that Lot A included 0.02 acre of “house” land. He inspected the site again with DLO staff and submitted a proposed layout plan in September 1998.

3. As the proposed NTEHs were both to be within Lot A, it was necessary to transfer 390 square feet of “house” land from Lot B to meet the shortfall. However, under current Lands D policy, the gross floor area of a building lot was not transferable to another. After seeking legal advice, DLO informed the complainant in October 1999 that his proposal would be unacceptable if it was ascertained that the house land on Lot A was only 0.02 acre.

4. In March 2000, on DLO’s request, the complainant again submitted a sketch of his proposal. In April, DLO sought legal advice on the development conditions of Lot B, but these could not be ascertained as neither the relevant file nor the land grant conditions of Lot B was available.

5. DLO informed the complainant in December 2002 that his application could not be processed further because the policy did not allow the land exchange and there was local objection to his proposal. DLO later undertook to look into the local objection and keep him informed.

6. In March 2004, the complainant wrote to DLO to complain about slow progress. DLO then found the main case file missing. It had, therefore, to reconstruct the file and failed to ascertain whether the assistance of the District Office (“DO”) had ever been enlisted to resolve the local objection according to the normal procedures.

7. Lands D had advised that if the complainant intended to build both NTEHs on Lot A, he ought to apply for a land exchange by surrendering his two lots to Government for re-grant of a new lot.

Observations and Opinions

8. There were obviously delays in DLO’s handling of the case. It had waited one year before asking the complainant for evidence on the land status of Lot A and another one-and-a-half years before seeking legal advice. No significant action had been taken from July 1999 to February 2000 and from May 2000 to December 2002 when it advised the complainant that his application could not be processed further. Six years had elapsed by then.

9. DLO had handled the application in a haphazard manner. It sought legal advice regarding Lot A in July 1999 and then Lot B in April 2000. Had it done so in one go, much time and resources could have been saved.

10. Its loss of the case file also constituted maladministration. Furthermore, DO had no record of having been asked to help resolve the local objection. It would appear, therefore, that DLO had not followed the normal procedures in this case.

Conclusion

11. The Ombudsman, therefore, considered this complaint substantiated.

12. Lands D accepted our recommendations as follows:

- (a) to apologise to the complainant;
- (b) to expedite the processing of the complainant's case; and
- (c) to remind staff to process similar applications carefully and efficiently according to established procedures and of the importance of safe-keeping of files and records.

LANDS DEPARTMENT ("Lands D") AND TRANSPORT DEPARTMENT ("TD")

Case Nos. OMB 2004/0022; OMB 2004/0964

Lands D – land use – leaving a car park site idle – partially substantiated

TD – provision of car park – failing to open the car park to meet public demand – unsubstantiated

The complainant alleged that due to a dispute over land ownership between Government and a group of indigenous villagers, a car park had been left idle for months since its completion in July 2003. He considered that Lands D and TD should have clarified the land ownership before constructing the car park.

2. The car park was, in fact, meant for local villagers and their visitors. Although the Lands Administration Office Instruction ("Instruction") of Lands D provided that it be metered and managed by TD, the villagers strongly objected and applied for a Short Term Tenancy ("STT") of the site at nominal rent instead. Lands D's counter-proposal of an STT at full market rent was endorsed by the District Lands Conference and TD.

3. Lands D had explored the possibility of opening the car park to the public while processing the STT application. However, on the District Office's advice about the villagers' likely reaction, Lands D shelved the idea. To reduce the idling time of the car park, it urged the villagers in June 2004 to form a legal body within three months to manage the car park as lessee of the STT.

4. TD expressed willingness to manage the car park in the interim, but when consulted by Lands D, it showed concern over the possible adverse public reaction when the car park was closed again in future for the villagers' exclusive use under the STT.

Observations and Opinions

5. We found that as the car park was built on Government land, the complainant's allegation of a dispute over the land ownership was unfounded. Nevertheless, the fact that the car park had been left idle since mid-2003 was an open reminder of Government inefficiency in planning and coordination.

6. The villagers' formation of a legal body and Lands D's assessment of market rental for the STT took time. Lands D should have been aware of this and sought TD's cooperation in opening the car park to the public in the interim. It should also have processed the small house applications within the area more efficiently to enable the villagers to move in earlier and use the car park.

7. TD had the capacity to manage the car park and should, therefore, have been more positive over opening it to the public in the interim.

8. Of the two departments, Lands D was the more culpable as it is the Lands Authority and should not have tolerated the idling of the site for so long.

Conclusion and Recommendations

9. The Ombudsman, therefore, considered the complaint against Lands D partially substantiated and that against TD unsubstantiated.

10. The Ombudsman recommended that Lands D:

- (a) revise the Instruction to permit greater flexibility in the management of car park, e.g. STT and interim public car parks;
- (b) urge the villagers to expedite formation of a legal body for the STT;
- (c) prescribe the commencement date of the STT as soon as the processing of small house applications was completed; and
- (d) pending operation of the STT, open the car park for public use.

11. The Ombudsman also recommended that TD manage the car park for public use in the interim.

12. As negotiation on the STT terms were in progress and most villagers had accepted the small house grants, The Ombudsman withdrew her recommendations in paragraphs 10 (d) and 11.

LANDS DEPARTMENT ("Lands D"), TREASURY ("Try") AND RATING AND VALUATION DEPARTMENT ("RVD")

Case Nos. OMB 2003/4265; OMB 2004/2575;
OMB 2004/3347

Lands D and RVD – Government rent – failing to revise Government rent upon redevelopment of a land lot and being unfair to the current owners in asking them to pay the rent arrears that should have been paid by the former owners – substantiated

Try – same – unsubstantiated

The Owners' Corporation of Building A complained that the land lot where Building A was situated ("the Lot") had undergone two redevelopments in 1978 and 1993, but RVD and Try had not accordingly revised the Government rent then. In 2003, Lands D retrospectively revised the rent and asked the current owners to pay the arrears since September 1978. The complainant considered this unfair to the current owners as part of the arrears should have been paid by the former owners.

2. The lease of the original lot, which included the Lot, had been "renewed" by Government in May 1973 through granting a new lease. Subsequently, the Lot was excised from the original lot in 1977. According to Land Office Circular Memorandum No. 41 ("the Memorandum"), the rent for the Lot as of 1 July 1973 should be the amount specified under the renewed lease (i.e. $82,840 a year) or an amount equal to 3% of the rateable value of the Lot, whichever is the lower. Because of the low rateable value of the Lot at that time, the rent was set at $536 per annum only.

3. In 1978, the Lot underwent its first redevelopment and the rent should have been adjusted to $8,280 yearly. However, Try continued to charge the then owners $536 a year. When the Lot was again redeveloped in 1993 into Building A, the rent should have been revised to $82,840 a year. However, Try still charged the owners $536.

4. In June 2002, RVD discovered the problem. It thus informed Lands D, which had since April 2002 assumed responsibility for collecting Government rent. In July 2003, Lands D sent a demand note to the owners of Building A for payment of rent arrears since September 1978, totalling about $868,420.

5. Before 2002, RVD had mistaken the lease of the Lot as being newly granted and was not aware that the Memorandum applied. Consequently, when the Lot twice underwent redevelopment, RVD did not follow Government instructions to notify Try of the new rateable value. Try thus did not demand a new rent based on the new valuation.

6. Lands D had a duty to notify RVD of new buildings for assessing their rateable value. However, it did not alert RVD in 1993 of the need to reassess the newly constructed Building A. Notwithstanding this, Lands D considered it its right and duty to recover any rent arrears.

Observations and Conclusion

7. There was maladministration on the part of Lands D and RVD, as neither had followed the established procedures applicable to the Lot. The complaint against the two departments was, therefore, substantiated.
8. Though Try was formerly responsible for collecting Government rent from owners on behalf of Lands D, it had not been notified by RVD of the new rateable value of the Lot and, therefore, was not aware of the need to revise the rent. Hence, the complaint against Try was unsubstantiated.
9. Overall, this complaint was partially substantiated.

Recommendations

10. Whether the current owners of Building A were liable for the rent arrears involved interpretation of the lease conditions and legal opinion, so this Office would not comment. The complainant should seek legal advice to clarify its legal responsibility.
11. The Ombudsman recommended that:
 - (a) Lands D step up publicity to remind prospective buyers to check before acquiring a property whether there was Government rent in arrears; and
 - (b) Lands D and RVD revise their departmental guidelines to set out clearly the division of duties and the procedures for the assessment of Government rent for new buildings.
12. The recommendations were accepted and implemented.

LEGAL AID DEPARTMENT ("LAD")

Case No. OMB 2004/0995

LAD – legal aid application – staff negligence in failing to send letters to the complainant's correspondence address – substantiated

The complainant had applied to LAD for legal aid for her divorce case. To prevent her husband from learning of her application, the complainant gave her elder brother's address ("Address C1") as her "correspondence address" and entered her current residential address with her husband ("Address R") in the "residential address" column of the application form.

2. Later, the complainant wrote to LAD to change her correspondence address to Address C2. She further telephoned the Department to confirm receipt of her letter. About a month later, she enquired with the Department on the progress of her application and was informed that a letter had been issued rejecting her application. However, she did not receive that letter and so asked the staff to send it to her again. Subsequently, she discovered that the letter had been sent to Address R. She telephoned to query the Department for failing to send the letter to Address C2. Nevertheless, the staff replied that it did not matter as her husband would sooner or later know.

Response from LAD

3. LAD explained that in general, an applicant for legal aid would be required to fill out an application form. Its staff would make a photocopy of the front page of the completed form for inputting the applicant's personal particulars into the computer. Meanwhile, the original form would be given to a law clerk for taking the applicant's statement.

4. When the complainant submitted her application form, she had provided only the residential address shared with her husband ("Address R"). LAD staff photocopied the front page and input her personal particulars and Address R into the computer and the original was passed to a law clerk for her statement. While making the statement, the complainant offered her elder brother's address ("Address C1") as her "correspondence address".

5. The law clerk stated that when the complainant gave Address C1 as her "correspondence address" in the application form, he immediately photocopied the front page again and passed it to a colleague for follow-up action. However, there were two staff members present that day and he could not recall to whom he had given the information. The staff on duty that day also could not remember.

6. According to LAD records, the complainant had indeed provided different correspondence addresses but the Department had failed to update its records. When the complainant telephoned to enquire about progress, it then realised the omission. There and then, staff input the new address into the computer and sent the rejection letter to Address C2.

7. As for the allegation against the staff who answered her query, LAD believed that it could have been due to some misunderstanding in communication. The staff concerned was only trying to explain the legal proceedings and not commenting on her application. In this connection, the Department apologised to the complainant for any distress caused.

Observations and Comments

8. The law clerk was negligent in failing to ensure that the complainant's correspondence address was input into the computer. Although he claimed to have passed the data to colleague, he could not identify the staff concerned. This Office, therefore, could not accept his defence. It was obviously due to the negligence of LAD staff that the Department had repeatedly failed to update the complainant's correspondence address.

9. As for the complainant's allegation against the staff who answered her query, this Office accepted the Department's explanation.

Conclusion and Recommendation

10. The Ombudsman considered this complaint substantiated.
11. The Director of Legal Aid accepted our recommendation to issue a written apology to the complainant.

LEISURE AND CULTURAL SERVICES DEPARTMENT ("LCSD")

Case No. OMB 2003/3067

LCSD – enforcement action – misuse of authority and perfunctory conduct of subsequent investigation – partially substantiated

The complainant and his family went to a park to celebrate the Mid-Autumn Festival. They lit some candles in a moon-cake container for about half an hour. An LCSD special patrol team came and gave them a verbal warning against burning wax. A row then ensued and the LCSD staff called the police for assistance. When the complainant and his family were leaving the park, two team members followed them. Suddenly, allegedly one of the team members lay on the ground, claiming to have been assaulted and injured. The police arrived and tried to mediate. The team leader asked the team member who claimed to have been injured not to pursue the case and the police let the complainant and his family go.

2. Alleging that the staff concerned had misused their authority, the complainant filed a complaint to the Home Affairs Bureau, a Legislative Councillor, a radio programme and LCSD, copying his letter to this Office. On completion of its investigation, LCSD sent a written reply to the complainant but he was not satisfied. He considered that the Department had handled his complaint perfunctorily without an in-depth investigation. He, therefore, lodged a complaint with this Office.

Response from LCSD

3. LCSD explained that during the Mid-Autumn Festival, special patrol teams were deployed in various districts to step up enforcement action in its parks and urge people to refrain from "wax burning" to ensure a safe and clean environment and to prevent injuries to visitors and damage to public property.
4. On the evening of the incident, a patrol team found the complainant and his family burning some ten candles in a metal tin, some of them having melted. To prevent an accident, the team leader advised the complainant to dispose of the molten wax in the tin. He had no intention to press charges. The complainant resisted the advice, was uncooperative and suggested the team to call the police, which the team leader did. The complainant and his family then quickly packed up and left the scene. Two team members followed them and asked them to wait for the police. However, the complainant refused to comply. The team leader ordered his staff to stop following them but they failed to get the instruction. They then collided with the complainant and his wife and one of the team members fell and was injured. As the team member only had a minor scratch, with his consent and through mediation by the police, both parties agreed to settle the dispute and the complainant would not be charged.

5. The complainant subsequently lodged a complaint with LCSD demanding an apology from the injured team member and a statement from the team leader that the injury had nothing to do with his wife. After an investigation, the Department considered that both parties had already agreed not to pursue the case in the presence of the police. Meanwhile, there was no justification for the staff to extend an apology to the complainant or make the above statement.

6. LCSD indicated that it had issued guidelines to staff on the proper procedures to handle and report any staff casualties in the course of duty. As the team leader thought the member only had a minor injury, he had chosen not to report it in accordance with the guidelines. Nevertheless, to prevent recurrence of similar incidents, the Department had stepped up its instructions to its staff, urging them to remain calm and restrained in their enforcement action to avoid any confrontation. It would also brief its staff and issue relevant guidelines on the appropriate ways to handle difficult offenders and confrontational situations.

Observations and Opinions

7. This Office considered that LCSD staff had believed, on the basis of their professional knowledge and experience, the complainant's act might be hazardous and advised him accordingly. The complainant should have accepted the advice and stopped burning wax. All citizens should obey the law and cooperate with law enforcement officers.

8. In our view, LCSD staff had acted too hastily in calling the police for assistance when challenged by the complainant. When the team leader tried to persuade the complainant to wait for the police but to no avail, he ordered his staff not to follow the complainant. However, some members failed to get the instruction in time and they continued their pursuit. This Office queried whether it was necessary for the patrol team to adopt such actions. Meanwhile, the team also showed a lack of coordination.

9. This Office believed that the team leader had meant well in deciding not to pursue the case. However, we doubted whether that was appropriate. We considered that when one of his team members claimed to be injured, the team leader should have sent him to hospital for treatment immediately while anyone suspected of assault should be handed over to the police.

Conclusion and Recommendations

10. Although LCSD staff had not misused their authority, there was clearly inadequacy in handling the incident. Moreover, the team leader had failed to report to the Department the staff injury in the course of duty in accordance with administrative circular. He was, therefore, suspected of dereliction of duty.

11. As LCSD had conducted an investigation upon receipt of the enquiries and complaint and explained the result of the investigation to the complainant, the Department had not handled the complaint perfunctorily.
12. Overall, the complaint was partially substantiated.
13. This Office recommended that LCSD:
 - (a) issue a circular as soon as possible directing its supervisory staff/officers-in-charge to provide appropriate medical assistance to any staff who was assaulted and sustained injury while on duty; and send the staff to hospital for treatment when necessary or at the staff's request. The supervisory staff/officers-in-charge should report any accidents to the Department in accordance with the relevant administrative circular;
 - (b) review its existing guidelines to improve staff communication and coordination in enforcement actions, increase their efficiency and draw up criteria for and detailed notes on issuing "verbal advice/warning" or instituting prosecution against offenders;
 - (c) enhance its existing training programmes to allow its staff to learn the proper law enforcement procedures and knowledge; and
 - (d) consider follow-up action regarding the team leader's failure to report the staff injury in the course of duty.
14. LCSD accepted and implemented all our recommendations.

LEISURE AND CULTURAL SERVICES DEPARTMENT ("LCSD")

Case No. OMB 2004/1928

LCSD – library services – unreasonable regulations on overdue fines for library materials borrowed – unsubstantiated

The complainant borrowed two books and three accompanying CD-ROMs from a LCSD public library and returned them four days after the due date. He believed that he would need to pay a fine of $12 only since the overdue fine was $1.5 per book per day. However, the library staff asked him to pay $30 since the three CD-ROMs attracted fines as well.

2. The complainant considered it unreasonable to treat the books and their accompanying CD-ROMs as separate items, because readers were only allowed to borrow a maximum of six items at any one time. Should an item contain accompanying CD-ROMs and the borrower take six items with some containing CD-ROMs, this would then exceed the prescribed limit.
3. According to LCSD, the leaflet entitled "Library Materials Lending Services" ("the Lending Services leaflet”) published by public libraries stated that readers could borrow a maximum of six items of library materials. Accompanying library materials would not be counted as a lending item. In the case of the complainant, the two books and three accompanying CD-ROMs would count only as two items on loan.

4. Nevertheless, to prevent readers from returning only the main items but delaying the return of accompanying materials or even not returning them, an overdue fine would also be charged on each accompanying library material as of 15 March 2003. For materials borrowed from the adult lending library, the overdue fine is $1.5 per item per day as stated in the Lending Services leaflet that “the penalty applies to all library materials including books... CD-ROMs and accompanying library materials”. Consequently, the complainant had to pay the fines for the two books and the three accompanying CD-ROMs.

5. The librarian concerned indicated that the complainant had admitted to having received a leaflet about the new regulations on overdue fines. When he borrowed the accompanying materials, the library staff had also so informed him. However, the complainant denied having received the leaflet or being forewarned. In the absence of independent evidence, this Office could not ascertain if he was aware how overdue fines would be calculated.

6. On the other hand, although the Lending Services leaflet did not explain clearly that accompanying library materials were not included in the maximum number of lending items, the method of calculation of overdue fines was explicitly set out in the leaflet and the LCSD website. It was, therefore, reasonable for LCSD to demand payment of an overdue fine for the accompanying materials. As a matter of fact, a fine for such materials would not only serve to remind readers to return them on time but also foster a responsible attitude towards borrowed materials.

7. In this light, The Ombudsman considered this complaint unsubstantiated.

8. To avoid misunderstanding, LCSD had since amended the Lending Services leaflet to state clearly that each reader could borrow a maximum of six items of library materials plus their accompanying materials.

OFFICIAL RECEIVER’S OFFICE (“ORO”)

Case No. OMB 2004/1177

ORO – handling of offence report – failing to take timely action on the complainant’s report against a bankrupt dishonestly borrowing money from him – substantiated

In late 2002, the complainant reported to ORO that Madam A had borrowed some tens of thousands of dollars from him without disclosing her bankrupt status.

2. The complainant then telephoned Case Officer A of ORO many times for progress of investigation. However, each time the reply was “due to manpower shortage and heavy workload, the case was still being processed” or such like.
3. When the complainant called again in March 2004 to enquire about progress, Case Officer B advised that Case Officer A had retired and Madam A had discharged from bankruptcy. He was also advised to make a fresh bankruptcy petition against Madam A if he wanted to continue his claim for the debt.

Observations and Opinions

4. ORO admitted that Case Officer A had retired and that the case file did not contain any record of his investigation. Consequently, the details of the investigation could not be ascertained. This Office believed that Case Officer A had not conducted any thorough investigation.
5. Case Officer A was also found to have failed to follow ORO’s established guidelines and procedures to issue an interim reply to the complainant within ten days or to record progress of investigation. Furthermore, he had not formally addressed the complainant in writing on findings from the investigation. He had not passed the case to the Prosecutions Section lawyers to consider whether to prosecute or briefed his successor on the case before his retirement. It was, therefore, not known whether the investigation had been completed. These features obviously constituted gross maladministration.
6. ORO had no effective monitoring system for handling and overseeing reports of offence. Its internal guidelines were unclear and unable to ensure that all such reports were properly followed up and investigated. This case showed up the deficiencies of the procedures. Even when an informant was dissatisfied with the case officer’s decision and requested a review of a case, there was no system in place in ORO to alert the case officer’s supervisor and/or other senior staff.
7. ORO had procedures for handling general “complaints” (including objection by the informant to the decisions of a case officer) and for senior officers’ checking of the outcome of investigation into complaints. However, if an informant did not know of such procedures and merely expressed dissatisfaction over the findings of an investigation without specifically lodging “a complaint”, then ORO might not handle the case according to its “complaint handling procedures”.
8. The weaknesses identified in this case were reflected also in another complaint against ORO then under investigation. In that other case, an ORO case officer failed repeatedly to respond to the numerous written enquiries from the complainant, without his supervisors being aware at all. This underlined the inadequacies in ORO’s monitoring mechanism.

Conclusion

9. The complaint was substantiated.

Recommendations

10. This Office recommended that the Official Receiver:
 - (a) formulate guidelines on the classification of “no further action” cases;
 - (b) draw up guidelines on the supervision of reports and the ways to avoid possible time-barred prosecutions resulting from its staff’s faults; and
 - (c) remind case officers from time to time to adhere to established guidelines when following up reports and to keep proper records.

SOCIAL WELFARE DEPARTMENT (“SWD”)

Case No. OMB 2004/2042

SWD – handling of fraud report – (a) failing to follow up properly a report of fraudulent rental allowance claims; and (b) poor staff attitude – unsubstantiated

The complainant let her flat to Mr A, who stopped paying rents after eight months. The complainant applied to the Lands Tribunal to recover the rents and won the case. To assist SWD to investigate whether Mr A had made fraudulent claims for rental allowance, she submitted a photocopy of the tenancy agreement. She also requested SWD to give Mr A’s rental allowance to her to cover the outstanding rents, which SWD refused. She, therefore, complained against SWD for failing to take action on her report and continuing to grant to Mr A the rental allowance.

Complaint (a)

2. Upon receipt of the complainant’s report, SWD’s Social Security Field Unit referred the case to the Department’s Fraud Investigation Team (“FIT”) for further action. Before the fraud was substantiated, SWD had to continue paying Mr A the rental allowance.

3. This Office found that SWD had taken prompt action to refer the case to FIT for action. It was also reasonable for SWD staff to have refused to divulge details of the investigation to the complainant because of privacy concern. As regards the recovery of the outstanding rents, that was a civil dispute between the landlord (the complainant) and the tenant (Mr A). SWD had rightly not intervened. The complainant should recover the rents through civil proceedings, certainly not through SWD’s transfer of Mr A’s rental allowance to her.

4. The Ombudsman, therefore, considered complaint (a) unsubstantiated.

Complaint (b)

5. The complainant alleged the attitude of SWD staff to be poor, having kept her waiting in their office for hours. The staff claimed that they had called her name but she had not responded.

6. Though there was no independent evidence to prove that SWD staff had called the complainant, this Office considered it fair and reasonable for them to finish all their appointments first before receiving the complainant who had not made any appointment. There was also insufficient evidence about their attitude. Complaint (b) was, therefore, unsubstantiated.

Conclusion and Recommendations

7. Overall, this case was unsubstantiated.

8. The Ombudsman recommended that SWD remind its frontline staff to be courteous to the public and avoid an antagonistic attitude.

SOCIAL WELFARE DEPARTMENT ("SWD") AND HOUSING DEPARTMENT ("HD")

Case Nos. OMB 2004/2661 - 2662

SWD – timely information to client – (a) staff failure to keep promise to alert complainant before HD's recovery of his public housing unit – unsubstantiated

HD – recovery of public housing unit – (b) staff abuse of authority, removing or taking possession of property in complainant's unit – partially substantiated

The complainant and his family used to live in a public housing unit ("unit"). In March 2004, they moved out without informing HD and rented a private flat. The complainant's wife was then hospitalised and later referred to an Integrated Family Service Centre under SWD ("the Centre"). Her case was taken up by Officer A.

2. The complainant alleged that Officer A had told his wife that before recovering his unit, HD would write to SWD about his situation and that Officer A would then alert him.

3. In June 2004, the complainant learned that HD had thrown away his belongings in the unit except for several electrical appliances awaiting auction to offset the rent in arrears. The complainant alleged that HD staff had removed or taken possession of some valuable items and personal documents in the unit. He also complained that Officer A had failed to keep her word to alert him before recovery of the unit.

Complaint (a)

4. With the Centre's help, the complainant applied for Comprehensive Social Security Assistance ("CSSA"), including rent allowance, and succeeded in May 2004. However, the complainant used the allowance to pay for the rent of his private flat instead. HD was, therefore, not aware that the complainant was receiving rent allowance from SWD and so would not approach SWD in connection with his non-payment of rent for the unit.

5. Officer A also stated that she had only answered his wife's enquiry on the possible consequences of such non-payment of rent, but had not promised to alert the complainant of HD's recovery of his unit.

6. Furthermore, the complainant had not requested or authorised SWD to liaise with HD on matters relating to the unit. In other words, HD could not have informed SWD or the complainant of its recovery of the unit.

7. This Office could not think of any reason why Officer A should have made the alleged promise. Indeed, the complainant had not fulfilled his obligation to pay rent to HD and to inform it of his moving-out. He had only himself to blame for HD's recovery of the unit without his knowledge.

8. Complaint (a), therefore, was unsubstantiated.

Complaint (b)

9. As rent for the unit had remained outstanding since March 2004, HD issued a Notice of Eviction stating that the tenancy would be terminated on 31 May 2004.

10. On 24 June 2004, after the appeal period had expired, HD's estate office took action to recover the unit.

11. HD claimed that under the Housing Ordinance and the departmental Financial Instructions, HD was empowered to keep valuables such as cash, gold and jewellery found in the course of clearance. A notice should be posted at the front door of the unit, allowing the owner to claim them within seven days. In the absence of claim, the property would be auctioned and the proceeds used to offset the rent in arrears.

12. On the day of recovery, the three Housing Officers ("HOs") present did not find any cash or other valuables except four electrical appliances. They recorded and photographed the appliances. A notice was posted at the front door. They then instructed workers to put the items away in the estate's storeroom. For sanitary considerations, they further directed the workers to dispose of other items in the unit.

13. This Office noted that one of the three HOs had acted as witness. We considered such an arrangement reasonable and sufficient to eliminate the possibility of any property items being disposed of indiscriminately or stolen.

14. The HOs had also followed the departmental instructions in checking for the presence of cash or other valuables before they instructed and supervised the workers to remove the electrical appliances and dispose of useless items. There was no impropriety on the part of the staff concerned.

15. Nevertheless, this Office noted that while section 24(2) of the Housing Ordinance empowers HD to keep any property found and allow the owner to claim any such items within seven days, there was no distinction between “valuables” or “non-valuables”. In other words, HD had contravened the Housing Ordinance when it disposed of the complainant’s “non-valuables” without allowing him seven days to claim them.

16. We had also examined HD’s Financial Instructions and found that they were not clear with regard to the recording and storing of “non-valuables” and their return to the owner when claimed. We believed that the staff concerned had disposed of the complainant’s “non-valuables” immediately because of the inadequate guidelines.

17. As regards the complainant’s allegation of HD staff having taken possession of his valuables, this amounted to a criminal charge. We, therefore, did not comment.

18. Since HD had disposed of the complainant’s “non-valuables” inappropriately, complaint (b) was partially substantiated.

Conclusion and Recommendation

19. Overall, this complaint was partially substantiated.

20. This Office was pleased to note that HD had in September 2004 issued new guidelines to its staff to explain clearly the procedures. However, we considered that HD should review the legality of its new guidelines on immediate disposal of “perishable” goods.

21. HD undertook to do so.

TELEVISION AND ENTERTAINMENT LICENSING AUTHORITY (“TELA”)

Case Nos. OMB 2004/2582

TELA – complaint handling – delay in processing a complaint and in replying – substantiated

The complainant lodged a telephone complaint with TELA, the executive arm of the Broadcasting Authority (“BA”), in late March 2004 about certain errors made by the host in an episode of a television quiz in late February 2004. TELA sent him an interim reply on 20 April, followed by a substantive reply on 4 June stating that the matter was outside BA’s jurisdiction. The complainant was dissatisfied that TELA should have taken so long to reach such a conclusion.

2. TELA claimed that it had met its performance pledge by issuing the interim reply within 15 working days. However, as the complaint appeared to be outside BA's remit, TELA had accorded it low priority in view of its reduced staff strength and increased workload. That was why it had taken 53 working days to inform the complainant.

3. We noted that whilst TELA's interim reply indicated that investigation into the complaint had begun, no investigative action had actually been taken. The absence of accurate details in the interim reply also raised questions on whether it could be considered a "substantive response to complainant on progress or results of investigation" which, according to TELA's performance pledge, should be issued within 15 working days. The substantive reply issued on 4 June far exceeded the target of 15 working days.

4. Besides, it should have been obvious to TELA staff at the outset that the complaint was outside BA's remit. Taking 53 working days just to confirm this fact and inform the complainant was unduly long by any standard.

5. Our investigation also revealed that TELA had reviewed a wrong episode of the quiz though the data provided by the complainant through us were basically correct. This illustrated that TELA staff had handled the complaint and our inquiry in a lax manner.

6. The Ombudsman considered this complaint substantiated.

7. TELA accepted our recommendations as follows:

- (a) apologise to the complainant;
- (b) remind staff to give accurate information in letters to the public;
- (c) set separate target response time for "progress of investigation" and "results of investigation" in its performance pledge;
- (d) introduce a mechanism to screen out at an early stage complaints clearly outside BA's remit; and
- (e) set a shorter target response time for concluding such complaints.

TRANSPORT DEPARTMENT ("TD") AND HOME AFFAIRS DEPARTMENT ("HAD")

Case Nos. OMB 2003/4239; OMB 2004/0059

TD – ferry service licensing – failing to invite public tender for a new "kaito" ferry service licence – partially substantiated

HAD – public consultation – inadequate public consultation on the new service – unsubstantiated

The complainant was the licence holder for a "kaito" ferry service for an outlying island. In October 2003, he found that TD had issued to a company another licence for a new route between the island and the urban area. He alleged that the departments concerned had not conducted any public consultation or public tender. He also criticised TD for unfair treatment because the new service operated only on weekends and public holidays while he was required to serve a small clientele on weekdays as well.

Complaint (a)

2. Section 28(6) of the Ferry Services Ordinance provides that if it appears that two or more persons are likely to apply for a licence, the Commissioner for Transport shall arrange public tender. However, TD explained that very few people were interested in operating "kaito" ferry services because public demand was not high. Hence, the Department had been rather accommodating in processing applications for such licences and all had been issued without public tender.

3. This Office considered TD too arbitrary in deciding that no one else was interested to apply for the new licence and in thus waiving the public tender requirement. Indeed, TD itself had noticed an increase in demand from tourists for ferry service to the island. It should not have ignored the possibility of other parties being interested. Regarding the allegation that TD required the complainant to operate on both weekdays and public holidays while allowing the new service to operate on weekends and public holidays only, it would not be unfair if TD had given the complainant an equal opportunity to bid for the new service through public tender.

4. This Office noted that TD had all along adhered to departmental instructions drawn up in the early 1980s. Nevertheless, the instructions did not mention how to ascertain the need for public tender and how to conduct public consultation. The instructions were obviously outdated.

5. Complaint (a) was, therefore, partially substantiated.

Complaint (b)

6. TD had conducted public consultation through HAD, but had not informed the latter that the new ferry service was meant for tourists. HAD, therefore, had focussed on residents of the island, and consulted their representatives verbally, instead of presenting the case to the District Council. The residents' representatives, however, failed to inform the complainant, himself a resident.

7. The inadequate public consultation was due to the lack of clarity in TD's instructions to HAD. Complaint (b) against HAD was, therefore, unsubstantiated.

Conclusion and Recommendations

8. Overall, the complaint was partially substantiated.

9. The Ombudsman recommended that TD review and revise as soon as possible its departmental instructions on the public tender requirement and procedures for public consultation. She also recommended that HAD remind staff to be careful about the objectives and scope of consultation when receiving requests for public consultation from other departments.

10. Both departments accepted our conclusion and recommendations.

WATER SUPPLIES DEPARTMENT ("WSD")

Case No. OMB 2004/1549

WSD – demand for repair cost – failing to reply to written enquiry – substantiated

In December 1998, the complainant, a Government contractor of a District Office ("DO") under the Home Affairs Department, was carrying out drainage improvement works in the vicinity of a damaged water main. WSD suspected the damage to have been caused by the complainant. In March 2000, WSD issued a preliminary demand note to the complainant for repair cost estimated at $20,000. In April, the complainant wrote to WSD denying liability. WSD sought information from DO in May and was advised in June that DO had no record of the complainant having any site activity on the day of damage. Since then, WSD had taken no action to investigate the matter other than an instruction from the engineer concerned for a fresh set of undertaking form to be prepared for demanding payment.

2. Two years later, i.e. May 2002, WSD worked out the actual repair cost to be $23,886.30. Its Expenditure Section was then instructed to demand payment from the complainant. However, by omission attributed by WSD to the absence of a computer routine to alert the staff, no supplementary demand note was issued. Another two years later, WSD discovered this case and issued a demand note to the complainant on 2 April 2004.

3. On 16 April 2004, the complainant wrote to WSD objecting to the demand and requesting a reply. As there was no response from WSD up to 9 May, the complainant lodged a complaint with The Ombudsman.

4. On 21 June, WSD replied to the complainant that it was still considering the case and apologised for the delay in replying. On 30 June, WSD informed the complainant that the demand note had been cancelled after thorough investigation of the matter.
5. WSD admitted the delay in replying but attributed this to a misunderstanding between its Expenditure Section and Regional Staff.
6. The Ombudsman, therefore, found the complaint substantiated.
7. In addition, we observed that WSD had handled this case over an unacceptably long period of almost six years, with one omission or delay after another. We found not only that WSD was remiss in all the delays and omissions identified but that the attitude of its staff towards such matters surprisingly cavalier.
8. We recommended WSD to review its procedures and formulate a system for monitoring timely issue of demand notes.
9. In response, WSD expressed strong reservations on our observations. It contended that the time needed to process a case would depend on complexity of the case and work priorities at the time. Besides, the omission to issue the supplementary demand note was mainly due to limitation of the computer system.
10. As WSD had admitted delays, we did not accept its view that the delays had been mainly due to computer limitations. The Ombudsman considered our observations to be based on facts and saw no ground to alter them.
